ONE GLAD DEMOCRAT.

[On Thanksgiving day an Ohio Democrat sent the following poetical effusion to Hon. E. W. Durant, Stillwater.]

Bring me a reindeer sandwich.
A keg of Moerlein's beer,
It's the first Thanksgiving of pleasure,
I've had for many a year.
Fry me a ton of oysters,
Fix buckets of Irish stew;
Take me around to the Gibson,
And drink to this grand '92,
Fetch me a bear and a bison,
And see they are both good and fat;
Bring me a buffalo, bleeding,
And stuff it with grandfather's hat;
Throw me an acre of pancakes,
A carload of chocolate creams;
Tell Dunbar to hold me a minute,
Till I shriek an old-time scream.
Give me a Jefferson doughnut,
Smothered with Jackson juice;
Knock in the head of a barrel;
Give me a chance to cut loose.
Oh, for a chunk of beefsteak
As big as a buggy top;
Oh, for a mammoth cutlet
Soaked in a Bourbon sop.
Kill me a whale and an ostrich,
Bring "fizzes" and brandies a score;
And water, keep handy, I tell you—
I'm likely to ring for some more;
For I have been waiting and waiting.
My all on the die I did cast;
But now we have knocked the perisomroons,
And Cleveland has got there at last.
Clean my palate with soap and sapolio;
Speak of Harrison now, if you dare;
I'm a tiger, a wolf, and a lion;
A pirate, a big grizzly bear
Let me take drinks for millions;
Let me kiss Danny Dalton and sing,
I must chew Ermston's ear for a minute;
And Louis Bernard to me bring
Cleve and Steve have got there,
You bet they will never get out;
Give me a derrick, and lift me,
Hold me up while I "holler" and shout;
Think of New York—Indiana—
Illinois; Gee, whizz; how they went.
I bet every dollar I had, boys;
On Monday I hadn't a cent.
But now I am loaded with boodle;
For joy I cannot find words,
I get up at 2 in the morning
To throw silver dollars at birds.
Will I loan some? To you? Why should I?
You voted for Beanie and Reid.
Did Republicans ever help Dimmies
To office when they were in need?
We're on top, we have won, and you know it,
But come, we're all brothers, I think,
So, Republicans, Democrats, join me;
Let's all take a brotherly drink,

THE school law provides "that boards of trustees and boards of education may suspend or expel pupils for insubordination immorality or infectious disease." But do not provide for their expulsion for damage to books or property. There is a compulsory education law on our statute books providing that every person having control of a child between 8 and 16 years of age be required to send such child to school at least 12 weeks in each year. Delano has one who has not attended for some time, because the board expelled him for damaging property although his teacher claimed he was an obedient and good pupil. It is made the duty of any school director or president of the board of education to inquire into all cases of neglect to attend school as prescribed, and any officer neglecting for ten days after having been served with a written notice, by any tax-payer in the district to do so, unless the pupil has been excused, for reasons above named, said school officer is guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to a fine of not less than $20. nor more than $50. When a boy breaks through a grate in the floor. Or when a pupil finds an ink spot or other damage done to a book or an ink well broken on a desk and is suspended or expelled for the same what is his offense? INSUBORDINATION, IMMORALITY, or INFECTIOUS DISEASE? If it is either it must have been handed down by the board making such rules directly in the face of the School Law.

If the Legislature should be good enough to give us free text books, we would not thank them a bit unless they throw in a slate and pencil with each book.—EDEN VALLEY JOURNAL.

THE Times contains a picture of our Senator A. Y. Eaton. In one of his favorite attitudes, sawing the air with his right hand while he "Asks for Recognition." May be the presiding officer will be better able to recognize the Wright gentleman before the term is over. We expect he will.

THE Republicans assisted by several Alliance members succeeded in drumming up a sufficient number of senators and Representatives to hold a caucus. We noticed among the names of the absent A. Y. Eaton and J. A. Holler. These are two of our 38th legislative district men and it would appear from their absence from the Davis caucus that they have not been completely whipped into the party traces yet.

Hennepin County Schools.

The next session of the Hennepin Co. Teachers' Association will be held in Curtis' Hall, Minneapolis, on the last Saturday in January.

A good many teachers in the western part of Hennepin county will, in all probability, join the Delano association when organized.

A large delegation of Hennepin county teachers attended the State Teachers Association, at St. Paul, during the week.

Miss Maggie Finn is teaching a school near Osseo, this winter, in the town of Maple Grove.

A lady teacher, in the town of Minnetonka, who is not so meek as her name implies, has been going about telling that a young man, well-known in educational circles, tagged after her at the close of a recent session of the Hennepin county teachers' association, and tried to work into her good graces by referring to her quarrels with others and assuring her that she had his sympathy. She asserts that he is "mashed" on her and is giving the impression wherever she goes that "there is something wrong with his upper story," and we think there is, if he is "mashed" on her. However, if he really is of sound mind, and values a good name, he will leave that teacher severely alone henceforth and forever.

Mr. Shelley is re-engaged as principal of the Long Lake school, and is succeeding with his work there

At a meeting of the Minneapolis Board of Education last Tuesday, one of the directors moved to suspend Margart M. Cochrane from her position as principal of Webster school, for conduct unbecoming a teacher, etc., etc., and a very lively discussion followed. The board, however, decided to give the quarrelsome old school ma'am one more chance to "behave herself," but a motion was carried to condemn her conduct and to inform her of the displeasure and censure of the board. Mrs. Cochrane, it appears, is much given to noticing and exposing the faults of others, and has in this way many times incurred the displeasure of the public, who are now calling loudly for her removal. It will be remembered that last spring she gained for herself and the school of which she is the unworthy head a great deal of very unenviable notoriety by her wanton attack in the daily papers upon the character of a rural school teacher who happened to visit Webster school and inadvertently omitted to commend her among other Minneapolis teachers whose schools he had visited the same day and of whom he saw fit to write a few words of well merited praise in the Evening Tribune. He called at Webster school a little before the noon intermission had expired, he said, that he might be in season to observe the methods in vogue there for moving the children into the building. But Mrs. Cochrane, in her published letter, insinuated that his motive in coming to the school at such an unseasonable time was to have improper intercourse with one of her lady teachers during the noon hour, "when there were no pupils and few teachers in the building," with whom he acknowledged he had been on terms of intimacy some ten years ago, and whom he designated as "the bosom friend of a notorious character in St Paul" in one of his published explanations to the people in the various localities where he had resided during his lifetime and to whom it was alleged Mrs. Cochrane had sent many marked copies of her virulent letter. The affair was commented upon at great length by the papers throughout the country, and Mrs. Cochrane was universally condemned for the course she had taken, and it was thought that she would be extremely cautious in the future about attracting the attention of the public in a way to bring discredit upon herself and her school. But what was said in the papers does not seem to have been "a word to the wise," and the eratic old principal is again making herself the subject of a great deal of adverse criticism which in the end must be very hurtful not only to herself but to the Minneapolis schools as well. The efforts of the board to muzzel her will prove in vain. She should be dismissed at once.

Tariff Pictures.

Albumen paper which cost $27 a ream before the McKinley tariff passed, increasing the duty on it from 15 to 35 per cent., now sells for $23 a ream. It used to be made abroad only, but the new tariff has established its manufacture in this country.—New York Press.

There it goes again! The Press is not adapted to Minnesota at all. Albumen is, chiefly, white of egg, and albumen paper, of course requires lots of eggs in its manufacture, and the more eggs used the higher the price becomes. There is a tariff on eggs, and the Press and some other papers have been bragging how the 5 cts. a dozen tariff has raised the price of eggs, much to the satisfaction of the western farmer. But that was before election. And now, after election they are claiming that albumen paper is $.5 a ream cheaper on account of the tariff on it.

Macallister Ideas.

EDITOR GAZETTE:—Having seen Mr. Wm. Kennedy's letter on the school question in your issue of the 23d I naturally looked for a comment in the Eagle this week, and I was not disappointed, but I was very disappointed in not finding any argument at all in the editorial. Mr. Kennedy's (supposed) desire to be called "professor" seems to be one argument the Eagle uses in favor of the laws made by the school board and this argument will no doubt convince many in their favor. This gentleman editor proceeds to give the title of "a slop over" to a portion of Mr. Kennedy's letter now just what a slop over is? I don't know but coming from the editor of the Delano Eagle, and a member of the school board we must consider "a slop over" to be a very proper and model expression.

The editor in his article then gives an extract from Mr. Kennedy's letter dealing with the matter of the expulsion of boys for a slight damage to books and the only argument used is that it was a good thing Mr. Kennedy had sense enough to get out of his "One story frame school house." Now, why Mr. Kennedy should presume to criticise the actions of any school board, and particularly the Delano school board, while he is teaching in a one story frame building is a question hard to answer; allow me to say to Mr. Kennedy that in the future he must, at least, teach in a two story brick or stone school house before he dares to criticise, even in his own mind, the work or laws of any school board. He must drive such thoughts away as the temptings of the devil, at least till he gets out of his one story frame building.

Such are the arguments used by the Eagle and no doubt the public are convinced by them that the school board are infallible in their judgment regarding the use of free text books.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

The calendar now marks Jan. 2nd, 1893. So I wish the editor and staff of the GAZETTE a happy New Year.

Would say the beginning of this new year finds the people of Independence in rather a healthy and prosperous condition, during the past year we have not been visited by either blight pestilence or famine. And seemingly no mark of displeasure from divine providence has fallen upon us.

Things are very quiet since the holidays except we hear a rumor that chicken thieves are in the neighborhood.

Hope all the tax-payers of Independence, will remember the Road mass meeting to be held at town hall, Armstrong, on Jan. 10th, at 7:30 p. m. Everybody invited. Come out and give your opinion about roads.

R. M. Mills has been chosen as a delegate from Independence to the Road convention which will be held in St. Paul, 25 and 26 of the present month. And others may go from Independence not as delegates but as visitors.

The state legislature is now in session, and we should let that deliberating body know that we do not want an additional appropriation of money from this state to help carry on the World's fair at Chicago.

Two or three inches of snow would make good sleighing.

Free Text Books.

What I have to say on this subject may be away from the mark; yet, if it leads to a discussion that shall benefit anyone, I am wholly satisfied.

We can all see now just how many bribes it took to make a Panama Canal popular in France, but, what we can't see is just how many favors it took to make a D. D. Merrill text book law successful in Minnesota.

Free text books are stealthfully finding their way into many of the rural districts without any uniformity or ceremony nevertheless they are among the best books on the market.

Whoever has been watching the Free text book movement will observe that it has been growing in favor in the last two years.

And, if it is the voice of the people to have Free text books, I say let them be free and fresh, and as progressive as the age in which we live.

The self-sacrificing people of Minnesota swallowed all the imperfections of The Merrill law in hopes of getting a uniformity of books in our public schools. Yet, in the march of time, it became evident that these books were more uniformally obsolete than uniformally progressive.

If the coming legislature is to enact a free text book law, I say let them be watched. Let it be enacted by the wisdom of the age in which we live. I say let it be free and unrestricted by monopoly or pool. Let it be above reproach or bribery. And, if the bars to the public treasury are to be let down anew for the children of our state, let them show by diligence, punctuality and cleanliness that this money shall not be paid out in vain.

The question of education covers the book agents sins. Our county is overrun with chart and maps agents. "Charity commences at home" and so do high taxes. Go with use into many of our rural districts and I will find you over $150.00 worth of these modern school-fixture which have never been used 150 times.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Dec. 30, 1892

Speaker Crisp's visit to President-elect Cloveland, on a speceal invitation from the latter, has been the most absorbing topic of conversation in political circles this week. The visit of the Speaker of the democratic House—the highest position now held by a democrat—to the democratic President-elect was, of course, naturally an event of great interest to democrats, but the efforts of the busy-bodies who have ever since the election been striving to create the impression that these two eminent democrats were antagonistic towards each other has made it of interest to everybody, except the aforsaid busy bodies who expressed doubts about the two men holding a conference until it had actually been held. That was natural, too, for that conference toppled over all the carefully constructed stories of enmity between the Speaker and the President elect which had been so widely circulated during the last six or eight weeks. Those who profess to see something strange in the invitation and visit forget that for nearly two years past Speaker Crisp has been the official leader of the democratic party. The strange thing would have been for Mr. Cleveland, the leader elect, to have neglected to get the views of the party's present official leader.

Senator Carlisle's experience with the New York reporters this week caused him to swear off, on being interviewed. He says he was approached by some twenty-odd reporters and to each of them wrote up interviews with him, making him say things he had never dreamed of. He says, further, that any future publication purporting to be his opinion which does not have his signature attached will be bogus. Mr. Carlisle's friends say that for private reasons he has declined the Secretaryship of the Treasury, which Mr. Cleveland tendered to him.

A rumor is current here that Mr. Cleveland has succeeded in persuading Hon. Don M. Dickinson to be his Secretary of State. This as the late Artemus Ward would have said, is important if true. Mr. Dickinson told his friends when he was her the other day that he would not be a member of the cabinet.

A senator who saw and talked with Mr. Cleveland this week says that one of the first things he proposes to do after he becomes President is to put a man at the head of the pension bureau who will take the work of that office entirely out of politics and run it on strictly business principles.

Speaker Crisp has some very decided ideas on the immigration question, and they do not agree with those most popular just now. He thinks it will be a mistake to suspend all immigration, but favors the enactment of laws that will shut out and keep out the undesireable immigrant, while welcoming those made of the stuff to make good citizens. He fears however, that the cholera scare and other influences will be too much for Congress, and that some very radical legislation may be railroaded through.

The Inauguration committee has opened headquarters, and, notwithstanding some friction among citizens concerning the membership of the committee, everything is now moving harmoniously towards the grandest inauguration the country has ever had.

Representative Geary, of California, although a young man has already gained a reputation for level-headedness far beyond that of many of his older colleagues, and his terse summing up of what the party needs will add to that reputation. He says: "What the democratic party needs most is to get together. We don't want any rows or cliques or sets of men who wish to tear down present organization and to set up another of there own. It is only by getting together that the 53d Congress will be able to accomplish the mission of tarriff revision which the people at the polls directed it to preform."

If Senator Gray, of Delaware, becomes Mr. Cleveland's Attorney-General, as many democrats now think it is expected ex-Secretary Bayard will again become a member of the Senate.

Mr Harrison has called upon all the executive departments of the Goverment for information as to unjust discrimination against Citizens or railroads of the United States by the Canadaian Pacific railroad. This is believed here to mean that he intends to send a special message to Congress recomending retaliatory legislation.

The sub-committee of the House Immigration committee having the matter in charge has agreed upon a National quarantine bill and will report it to the full committee next week.

THEY call a bicycle "the devil's chariot" in Turkey and the sultan forbids its use.

TEN THOUSAND women in Boston took the trouble to register so as to insure their right to vote at the school elections.

THE British soldiers are now provided with black silk handkerchiefs on which army rules and regulations are printed.

THERE are no old maids in Japan. If a woman there is not married by a certain age the authorities pick out a man whom they compel her to marry.

THE present French republic has spent £40,000,000 in improving the waterways of the country, which reach a total length of 7,456 miles. All these canals are free.

CRINOLINE is again coming into fashion, and man, vain man, the lord of creation, is preparing to slide off the sidewalk and dispute the right of way with the street cars.

CANNIBALISM is still practiced in fourteen places in the world, and it is said that the tastes of the cannibals have not changed in the slightest. Cold missionaries are still prime favorites.

CALIFORNIA at the November election cast 187,958 votes for the proposition to elect United States senators by a direct vote of the people, and 15,342 against it. An educational qualification for voters was favored by 151,330 and opposed by 41,059.

MARY M. ANDERSON, who was a few years ago granted a separation from husband, Louis C. Anderson, of Seattle, has sued him for $25,000 damages on the ground of breach of promise. She avers that he courted her again a year ago, recaptured her heart, and promised to remarry her, but has since married some one else. A rather unique case.

ACCORDING to Aristophanes the qualifications of a demagogue are a vile voice, low birth and ill breeding. Then all a man has to do is to "mangle and mash everything, and flavor and spice to suit the people's taste." In these days the most successful demagogue must have a soft voice, good birth and gentle breeding. He must coddle and not mangle, and substitute mush for mash. As for the flavoring the recipe still stands.

THE severity of British justice was well illustrated at Northampton recently, where a trial for murder was in progress. The jury having been permitted to partake of a lunch in their room, one of their number profited by the opportunity to step out of doors and post a letter The judge, to whom this act was reported, promptly gave the offending juror a sharp lecture and fined him $250. He dismissed the jury and a new one was impaneled.

WHEN he is inaugurated next March Mr. Cleveland will lack but a few days of being 56 years old, which is precisely the average age of presidents on their accession. The oldest president was William Henry Harrison, who was 68; Buchanan was 62; Taylor, 65; Jackson and Adams, 62; Monroe, 59; Jefferson, Madison and J. Q. Adams, 58; Benjamin Harrison, 57; Hayes, 54; Lincoln, 52; Tyler and Arthur, 51; Polk and Fillmore, 50; Garfield and Pierce, 49; Cleveland, 48, and Grant, the youngest president, 47.

J. S. PIZA, of Piza & Nephews, New York, has beaten time and the White Star liner Teutonic in a remarkable race. Missing the Dublin mail train for Queenstown be hired a special and traveled the one hundred and eighty miles in two hundred minutes, thus eclipsing the fastest long-distance time in England. The Teutonic was starting when he reached Queenstown. He chased it in a special steamer, telegraphed far ahead, caught the liner and got aboard with bag and baggage while all the passengers cheered.

THERE is getting to be too much foolishness about the courts, anyway, says the Kansas City Star. Smart lawyers are continually taking advantage of the law to shield open violators of the law, and judges permit it. A lot of sensible men who don't know a mandamus from a nebular hypothesis should be elected as judges, with instructions to laugh at the shystering practitioners where they try to shield "well-known criminals." A little more justice and a little less law is needed in the criminal courts of the country.

RICH gold placers are said to have been found in southern Utah, 150 miles from Durango, Col. Of course "great excitement prevails" in that region—"nothing like it since 1849," it is reported. The discovery was made a year ago but kept a secret until preparations could be effected for working the find. Should the fields prove as rich as reported the effect, says the Chicago Journal, would be marked upon business, and perhaps upon the monetary question. The chances are, however, that the "richness" is overdrawn, and was kept secret while capitalists were being "worked."

THE railroad construction for 1892 in the United States is footed up as 4,062 miles, which is about 10 per cent. less than the total for 1891. The course of railroad building shows that at any time within the last quarter of a century the work has proceeded fully as fast as wanted by the people, and in many cases has gone ahead of the demand. A total of 289 lines were built, the average length being but fourteen miles. The railroad mileage of the United States now foots up 174,663 miles, 53,000 miles of which have been added in the last ten years, and 104,000 in the last twenty years.

GEN. DYRENFURTH shook down precious little rain with his dynamite, roselite and other impulsive ites, but he stirred up the native population of Texas after a most astounding manner. His big hydrogen gas tank sprang a-leak one night and the next morning a wagon load of paralyzed rattlesnakes was picked up in the neighborhood of the camp and not a jack rabbit has been seen in that vicinity since. Experimental explosions near the earth's surface killed rattlesnakes, rabbits and lizards by thousands. If Gen. Dyrenfurth can't fetch rain he might be of service as a national snake destroyer.

PROF. BRIGGS WINS.

The New York Presbytery Votes Against Sustaining the Charges of His Prosecutors.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—The session of the New York presbytery, which is sitting as a court on the trial of Prof. Briggs, was begun promptly at 2 o'clock Friday afternoon. Each member was allowed three minutes in which to express his views.

The voting on the first charge was begun at 4 o'clock and the vote on the sixth charge was completed and the presbytery adjourned shortly before 6 o'clock. The result of the several ballots was then announced to the reporters. The result was a great surprise, for on all of the six counts the vote was adverse to sustaining the charges.

On the first charge, accusing Prof. Briggs of teaching that the reason is a source of Divine authority, the vote was as follows: To sustain the charge, 80; against sustaining the charge, 68.

On the second charge, which accuses Prof. Briggs with charging that the church is a source of Divine authority, there were 55 votes in favor of sustaining the charge and 71 against.

The closest vote was on the third charge, that Prof. Briggs taught that the Scriptures contained errors of history and fact. On this charge the vote was as follows: To sustain the charge, 81; against, 68.

After this vote had been taken two or three of the anti-Briggs men left the court and others refrained from voting on the last three charges.

On the fourth charge, accusing Prof. Briggs with teaching that Moses was not the author of the pentateuch, the result was: To sustain the charges, 53; against, 72.

The vote on the fifth charge, accusing Prof. Briggs with teaching that Isaiah did not write many of the chapters in the book bearing his name was: In favor of sustaining the charge, 49; against, 70.

The vote on the sixth charge, accusing Prof. Briggs of teaching that sanctification is progressive after death, was as follows: To sustain the charge, 57; against, 69.

The case will be appealed to the general assembly, which will meet in Washington early in the spring. The assembly will appoint a commission consisting of fourteen unprejudiced members to act on the appeal.

The friends of Dr. Briggs were greatly pleased with the result. They had calculated on a majority ranging from four to six.

The movement against Dr. Briggs practically took its rise January 20, 1891, when he was given the Edward Remsinon chair of biblical theology in the Union theological seminary. The alleged heretical doctrines he was accused of giving utterance to were culled from his inaugural address on that occasion. His address was severely criticised by many Presbyterian ministers in New York and by numerous others attached to outside presbyteries. Several articles scoring him for the views expressed were printed in religious journals. Demands were also made upon the New York presbytery that summary measures of discipline be taken in Dr Briggs' case.

The friends of Dr. Briggs claimed that the real motive of the attack on him was to stop the movement in favor of the revision of the creed. He had been one of the foremost leaders of the revisionists in the previous general assembly. The anti-revisionists, it was claimed, thought that if they could get him turned out of the seminary and then out of the church they could make an example of him that would scare others who held the same views and kill revision at one stroke. The New York presbytery met May 12, 1891, and after a stormy debate resolved that Dr. Briggs should be tried for heresy, and a committee was appointed to prefer formal charges.

The directors of the Union theological seminary propounded questions to Dr. Briggs which he answered to their satisfaction on May 20, 1891, and they decided to stand by him.

The presentation of the charges was made in June, 1891. At the meeting of the general assembly, held in Detroit, Mich., May 27, 1891, the committee on theological seminaries, to which the whole matter had been referred, presented its report condemning Dr. Briggs and advising that his appointment to the chair of biblical theology in Union theological seminary be disapproved. After two lengthy conferences by the committee of fifteen, appointed by the Presbyterian general assembly of Detroit and the directors of the seminary as to the removal of Dr. Briggs from his chair, held February 11, 1892, they adjourned without coming to any satisfactory understanding

Dr. Briggs was arraigned before the New York presbytery November 15, 1891, and it was voted to dismiss the charges against him without trial.

His prosecutors appealed from this decision to the next meeting of the general assembly at Portland, Ore., May 30, 1892. Dr. Briggs argued his case but the case was sent back to the presbytery for trial.

DIED IN HIS ARMOR.

A. H. Fairchild Killed by a Dynamite Explosion in Thirty-Five Feet of Water.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—A. H. Fairchild, one of the most skillful marine divers in the country, met a peculiar death in 35 feet of water at the end of the Inman line pier in the North river. He went down into the water in his diving suit, carrying with him several sticks of dynamite to be used in blasting out the rocky bottom. After he had been under water several minutes the men overhead, who were pumping air to the diver, heard a muffled explosion and the water was disturbed. Not answering a signal Fairchild was pulled up. His helmet was crushed into the side of his face and the dynamite had evidently exploded while Fairchild was ramming it down. On examination it was found that the concussion had snapped the valves of his heart, killing him almost instantly.

REVIEW OF THE YEAR.

Trade Has Followed the Lines of an Enlarging Prosperity—The Most Prosperous Year Ever Known.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

The most prosperous year ever known in business closes to-day with strongly favorable indications for the future. From nearly all points comes the report that the holiday trade has been the largest ever known, and while wholesale trade is not usually active at this season of stock taking it is remarkably large. Settlements through clearing houses outside New York in December were apparently the largest ever made in any month, exceeding last year's by more than 10 per cent. For the year the volume is also about 10 per cent larger than last year, and the largest ever known. Railroad earnings in December show an increase of about 3 per cent. over last year, and for the year an increase of about 5.5 per cent. Foreign trade has been smaller than last year in volume of exports—at New York $7,800,000 in value for the last four weeks, and at cotton ports about $10,000,000 less—but imports at New York have been $3,000,000 larger, and the month still shows a great excess of exports. For the year the excess of merchandise exports has been not far from $70,000,000, with the largest imports and the largest total of exports and imports ever known in any year.

The year closes with all woolen, cotton and silk machinery fully employed, and unsold stocks of goods much lighter than usual, while the demand for the coming season already exceeds the capacity of many mills. The orders in dry goods are extraordinary. Sales of wool at the chief markets have been 390,000,000 pounds, against 246,000,000 last year, and foreign imports have been the largest ever known, with a domestic supply but slightly behind the largest.

Boston reports a quiet wholesale trade. Wool is quiet but firm. At Philadelphia iron is weak. At Pittsburgh iron is slower, and the demand for finished products is diminishing, but glass is fairly active. The shoe trade of Cleveland is excellent and other trade good, though in iron no improvement is seen, and 4,000,000 tons iron ore remain on the docks. The clothing trade is good at Cincinnati, and machinery and foundry business up to the usual mark. At Detroit trade is maintained. Business at Chicago is good in all lines, especially in heavy dry goods. Holiday trade was very good at Milwaukee. At St. Louis retail trade unusually strong. Business at St. Paul exceeds last year's and is large at Minneapolis, though lack of water restricts the flour output. The lumber trade is most prosperous. Business at Omaha and at Kansas City is satisfactory. At Nashville trade is good and at New Orleans active, especially in sugar.

In iron the trade is weaker, the demand for finished products being at present light. But steel rails have been reduced to $29 per ton, and sales of 78,000 tons have followed. This great industry has been much affected by the market for securities, which has been depressed for some months by foreign selling and monetary uncertainties, so that companies have been restricted in purchases of rails and supplies. But for the last week stocks have been stronger, gaining about $2 per share in average prices. Speculation in products has been comparatively inactive, though wheat has been advanced by a western pool nearly two cents.

Cotton has been steady and strong, with diminished receipts.

The year 1892 was remarkable for fewer failures than have occurred in any other year since 1890, the numbers reported being 10,344, or 2,029 less than in 1891. The indebtedness of firms failing was but $114,000,000 in 1892, against $189,000,000 in 1891 and about the same in 1890.

The average liabilities of firms failing in 1892 has been only $11,000, the lowest average reported since 1878.

In 1892 only one in every 113 traders failed, against one in every ninety-three in 1891, and one in every 102 in 1890.

HANGED.

Execution of A. J. Hudspeth at Harrison, Ark., for the Murder of a Man Whose Body Was Never Found.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 31.—A. J. Hudspeth was executed at Harrison, Ark., Friday for the murder of George Watkins in 1887. Hudspeth was hanged for the murder of a man whose body was never found. The murderer worked for Watkins on a farm in Marion county. One morning in the spring of 1887 Hudspeth and Watkins went to town. Since that morning Watkins has never been seen. Hudspeth was arrested on suspicion of murder. Mrs. Watkins was afterwards incarcerated charged with being an accessory to the taking off of her husband. She was taken fatally ill, but before dying confessed that Hudspeth killed her husband to get him out of the way so he could marry her. Hudspeth was sentenced to be hanged. The case has been appealed and retried, two respites have been granted, and the fate of execution changed three times, but all efforts to save the murderer failed. Traces of blood in the wagon and a bloody hatchet found in the wagon bed were the only evidences of foul play other than the strange disappearance of Watkins, aside from the wife's testimony.

Lost His Gold.

RUSHVILLE, Ill., Dec. 30.—John H. Starr, of Buena Vista township, this county, moved to McDonough county, Ill., recently to live with his son. A few days ago they decided to purchase a farm jointly, the father telling his son he had $2,000 in gold hid under a stump at his former home in this county. The next day they went to where he had secreted the treasure. Evidences of digging were noticed around the stump and an attempt to find the money proved that it had been taken away. The old man had had the gold in his possession for many years.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Mr. Justice Denman, who has long been one of the most famous of British judges, and who is soon to retire from the bench, has occupied his leisure during recent years in translating Gray's "Elegy" into Greek elegiac verse and in turning the first book of Pope's Homer's "Iliad" into Latin elegiacs.

—On a ride in St. Petersburg once, Miss Hapgood encountered one of the emperor's cousins. The grand duke mistook them for acquaintances, and saluted. The driver returned the greeting. "Was that Vasily Dmitrich?" Miss Hapgood inquired, in Russian form. "Yes, madam." "Whom was he saluting?" "Us," replied the driver, with imperturbable gravity.

—Here is a curious characteristic anecdote of Prof. Jewett, the translator of Plato. At a dinner he said to a young man who was one of the guests: "What was the saddest event in history?" The young man, much taken aback, stammered out, "Robert Elsmere." "No," said the distinguished Grecian, regarding him compassionately, "it is the death of Falstaff."

—Gordon MacKay, of Boston, according to the Courier of that city, not only gives his divorced wife $25,000 a year, but has withdrawn the proviso that she shall receive it only so long as she remains unmarried. The same authority mentions a rumor that the lady will soon become the wife of a prominent Washington lawyer. Mr. MacKay's income is said to be about $300,000 a year.

—Prof. E. E. Barnard, of the Lick observatory, one of the discoverer of Jupiter's fifth satellite, is only about forty years old. Only a few years ago he was earning a scanty living as a clerk in a photograph gallery in Nashville, Tenn. He possessed a natural fondness for astronomy, however, and devoted his spare moments to study. His means were so limited that it was long before he could succeed in saving enough money to purchase even a very small telescope.

—Mr. F. Marion Crawford, the novelist, said recently: "I think there is a richer field for the novelist in the United States than in Europe. There are more original characters to be found here, and they are in greater variety. You have the richest field in the world for the novelist to work in right here in the United States, and when properly handled and developed it will make the United States the great arena for the novelist, as it is already the center of almost everything else."

—Renan was about as careless of his personal appearance and as absent-minded as Neander, of whom it is related that he once went into his pulpit to preach wearing his flannel chamber robe—having betaken himself to study as soon as he got out of bed, and so forgot to dress himself. So Renan started off to congratulate the duke of Aumale on the duke's election to the academy, wearing his study coat—a mass of shreds and patches. The company was a brilliant one, and he observed to his wife when he came back that he could not make out how it was he attracted so much attention at the duke's.

SERMONS WEAR OUT.

Even Good Ones Had Better Be Burned After Being Preached a Few Times.

"It is a very long time since I preached a written sermon in the pulpit," says the bishop of London, according to the Times of that city, "but when I did preach written sermons, which I did for a considerable number of years, I always used to find that if I had preached the same sermon in different places, say, five times, I had had enough of it—whether other people had had enough of it or not. I became thoroughly tired of the whole thing, and was obliged to turn my mind to something altogether different; and I have always advised preachers, after having preached a discourse a certain number of times, without laying down how long they might have been in doing it, to burn such sermons. I am convinced myself that the best way always is to write your sermon three times over and then to burn it and preach what you remember of it. But even that will not do when you give up writing sermons, and when you come to speaking, not without previous preparation, but without any previous writing of it. It will not do simply to burn what notes you have written, because then the words stay in your mind, and if you have to speak out, they come whether you want them or not. They are ready and the occasion seems to present itself, and the words seem as if they had a sort of independent action of their own, and they say: 'Here's my place,' and out they come."

SELECTING A HAT.

An Expert Tells How to Do It in the Right Way.

There is a point on every man's head where that particular man should wear his hat, says the Outfitter. Some men can wear their hats well down, close to the eyebrows, and look well in doing so. Other men's appearance would be fatally ruined by wearing their hats so low.

Now and then a man can adopt an irregular pose for his hat, sideways, "down in front," or a little back, and not lose caste as a reputable member of society. All the same, whatever position of the hat is found to be becoming and comfortable should be adhered to, and no new hat accepted which does not reach and stop at that point.

In determining the proper hat bearings it is well to take a side view as well as the front view of one's self with the hat on. The hat should come down low enough to take a firm grip on the head when the wind blows.

Royal Baking Powder

Strongest, Purest, Most Economical.

As to whether any of the baking powders are equal to the "Royal," the official tests clearly determine. When samples of various baking powders were purchased from the grocers, and analyzed by the United States Government Chemists and the Chemists of State and City Boards of Health, the reports revealed the fact that the "Royal" contained from 28 per cent. to 60 per cent. more leavening strength than the others, and also that it was more perfectly combined, absolutely pure, and altogether wholesome.

As most of these powders are sold to consumers at the same price as the "Royal," by the use of the Royal Baking Powder there is an average saving of over one third, besides the advantage of assured purity and wholesomeness of food, and of bread, biscuit and cake made perfectly light, sweet, and palatable.

The official reports also reveal the presence, in other powders, of alum, lime or sulphuric acid, by which their use is made a matter of grave danger to the consumer.

Whenever a baking powder is sold at a lower price than the "Royal," or with a gift, it is a certain indication that it is made from alum, and is to be avoided under all circumstances.

M. RENAN left no memoirs, being as adverse to the display of private life in books as was Tennyson. The best of his mind, the Frenchman used to say, was in his books intended for publication. It was his wish that not even his correspondence should get into print.

ONLY four homes of British writers have been preserved on account of the associations connected with them. They are the homes of Shakespeare, Milton, Burns and Wordsworth, and it is suggested that Somersby Rectory, Tennyson's birthplace, should be added to the number.

LORD TENNYSON was morbidly sensitive to all criticism of his work. An unkind word in the obscurest newspaper would literally cut him to the heart, it is said. At the same time he was curious to hear everything said or written about him, and he had a great relish for flattery.

A GALLANT RESCUE.

How a Brave Oarsman Saved a Child's Life.

FOR many year I resided in the village of Chippewa, situated at the mouth of Welland river (commonly called Chippewa creek), which flows into the Niagara about one and a half miles above the falls, and perhaps three-fourths of a mile above the first rough water of the terrible rapids.

Notwithstanding the dangerous proximity of the falls, people are continually crossing and recrossing the river here, between the American and Canadian shores.

Great caution is generally exercised by boatmen, and the loss of life on this stretch of water is less than on any body of equal width—constantly traversed by small open boats—that I know of. Deplorable fatalities have occurred from time to time, but these have always been the result of ignorance or gross carelessness.

Two cases of this kind have come under my own observation and I was unhappy enough to see the victims drawn down to the first leap of the rapids, after which not a trace of anyone of them was ever seen.

One of the instances was that of a farmer, who drove his horses and wagon into the edge of the river, at a shoal-place about a mile above Chippewa, to let the animals drink—that particular spot being the only one for many miles which was adapted to the purpose.

The man, though perfectly familiar with the locality, carelessly drove in too far, and, upon attempting to turn about, one of the reins caught under the neck-yoke, the horses floundered into the deep water, the heavy running gear sank, dragged the poor brutes down and drowned them, while the light pine wagon-box floated off with the man!

The unfortunate fellow was known to be a good swimmer, and if he had instantly jumped out and made for shore, all would have been well. But he was frightened out of his wits and did nothing but scream for help. Now comes the strangest part of the story. The accident was witnessed by another farmer, plowing in a field close at hand. As he well knew, there was not a boat of any kind nearer than Chippewa, and yet, instead of springing on one of his horses and riding for life, he actually walked down along the bank, keeping abreast of and talking to his imperiled neighbor and cheering him by the assurance that he would get a boat and take him off when he should come in front of the village!

Gradually—for such is the trend of the current there—as the box floated down-stream, it was borne further and further from land, and when it did arrive opposite the mouth of the Welland river was fully four hundred yards out.

Only then did the sympathizing friend rush into the village and give the alarm.

From the edge of the Niagara to Chippewa bridge, where the nearest boat lay, was at least three hundred yards. This distance he had to run, and find some one to unlock, equip with oars and man the boat. The consequence inevitably was that the doomed farmer was far beyond human help even before it started—started only and then turned back from the hopeless chase.

That awful cry, "a man going over the falls!" resounded through the village streets, and a crowd of people quickly gathered.

The hapless castaway was now shooting down that smooth, swift incline of water immediately above the rapids. He had evidently given up all hope of rescue, and was kneeling on the bottom of his frail raft, with outstretched clasped hands, apparently in prayer.

Faster and faster he was hurried along, and in another moment we saw the box lifted high on the crest of the rapids' first tumultuous ridge, shaken to pieces like a pack of cards and floated in fragments away amidst the seething hell of waters, while its late occupant disappeared forever from human view.

The second person whom I saw thus done to death was one of a party of duck hunters, who had been shooting in the weedy passage between Grand and Buckhorn islands. In spite of his companions' advice to the contrary, this man determined to remain out all night, in the hope of making a good bag in the early morning.

The last thing his comrades saw of him—so they told us—he had drawn the bow of his boat a little way up on a sandbar at the lower end of Buckhorn island, and laid himself down to sleep in her.

It is supposed that, while he slept, a change of wind caused the water to rise sufficiently to set the boat free—a moderate down-stream breeze would do it. At all events, shortly after daybreak next morning, some one of the Chippewa's early risers called out that an empty boat was going over the falls. A knot of interested spectators soon flocked down to the river's edge to see the exciting event—opinions being about equally divided as to whether the light skiff would live to reach the cataract itself, or would go to pieces on touching the rapids.

As we thus speculated, our idle talk was suddenly replaced by a general cry of horror, for, from the bottom of what we had thought an empty shell, the head and shoulders of a man all at once became visible, and the next moment he rose to his feet. Beyond all doubt the luckless being had only that instant awakened.

Can human imagination conceive or mortal pen describe what that awakening must have been?

A few short hours before he had lain down to rest in fancied security and with bright anticipations of coming sport. Now he opens his eyes and looks around to find himself—where?—on the very brink of that wildly-tossing, awful flood from which all the wealth, all the united powers of the world, cannot save him!

The boat was almost in the exact center of the river. Those of us who had field glasses could see that a group much larger than our own had congregated on the American shore to witness the final catastrophe.

It was not long delayed. In less than a minute after the poor man had become aware of his situation, he took off his hat, waved it frantically toward either bank, and an instant later was gone! Nor did any part of the boat again appear.

On a certain summer day, a young woman, half-crazed by terror, rushed along the lower street of Chippewa, screaming: "Oh, help! help! help! My little Jimmy's away out on the big river, and he'll go over the falls!"

Instead of jumping at once for boats, a number of men, as if doubting Mrs. Armstrong's word, ran down to where a view of the Niagara could be obtained, and there, afloat on its surface in an old boat, saw Jimmy, apparently enjoying his ride, but being gradually carried outward and down stream.

It seems that the little, five-year-old fellow had been playing in a small scow, the bow of which rested lightly on the beach, and had rocked it free of its hold, to his great delight, and floated serenely away.

On the west bank of Welland river, about two hundred and fifty yards above its junction with the Niagara, stood the house and shop of Joel Lyons, a stout, muscular shoemaker and a practiced oarsman. On hearing the alarm given, this man wasted no time in idle exclamations, but ran at once to where several boats were moored further up stream. Selecting one already provided with sculls, he sprang into it and was away at full speed before most of the onlookers had collected their senses.

Now there are two entrances and exits to and from the Welland; one, known as "The Cut," being on the upper or west side of an isolated bluff, called Hog island, and the other—the original channel—on the lower or east side.

It was from out this last named passage that the child had floated, and, consequently, he was much nearer the falls than if he had emerged into the Niagara from the Cut.

Lyons, of course, took the east channel, but he had quite four hundred yards of slack water to row over before striking the larger river, and when he reached it the little scow with its precious freight was at least that distance from shore and much closer to the rapids than even the boldest oarsman would ordinarily dare to go.

More and more earnestly, without a break or a skip, and with never-relaxing strength, the experienced sculler bent to his work, glancing now and again over his shoulder at the precious prize he had determined to win—or die in losing.

To us, who, hardly daring to speak or breathe, watched the fearful venture, its success appeared well-nigh impossible. The child could, perhaps, be snatched from the boat before reaching the rapids. But what then! Neither he nor his rescuer, we felt convinced, could ever regain the shore.

The poor women, Lyons' wife and Jimmy's mother, sobbed pitifully as we all hurried down the edge of the river so as to keep abreast of the skiff. None of us dared to encourage them by a hopeful word, for not one of us believed that either would ever again be clasped in the arms of husband or son.

The tiny scow was now quite six hundred yards from shore, and, with gradually accelerated motion, was drawing frightfully near the rapids. But the pursuing boat went four feet to its one and was swiftly closing the gap between them. The innocent babe had at last become alarmed, and as Lyons drew near he stretched his little arms imploringly toward him, a sight which drove the women nearly frantic and caused tears to roll down more than one manly cheek.

"Oh, hush! hush! not a word now, cheer yet," some one said, in a choking whisper, as the two boats came together. "The fight is still to win!"

As he ranged alongside Lyons pulled in one oar, leaned over the gunwale, caught up the child and lifted him into his own boat. "Too late! Oh, too late!" shrieked his agonized wife. And indeed, it so seemed to each one of us.

But then the noble fellow, cool as if there was no danger within a thousand miles, reshipped his oar and did the only thing which could offer a possible chance for life. He did not vainly attempt to stem the current by rowing upstream, nor even directly toward the shore, but turned his bow quartering down, and, pulling with nerves of steel and giant strength, shot with arrowy speed diagonally athwart the river's course, and in less than five minutes, landed safely at the head of the channel running between Street's island and the mainland!

Then—but why go on? No language, much less my poor pen, can adequately describe the scene which followed.

This incident is a matter of history, I presume, but I may inform those who now read of it for the first time, that the Royal Humane society of England soon after sent to Mr. Lyons its gold medal, in recognition of his daring deed—how daring no one unacquainted with its scene can realize.—Romance

SELLING WIVES IN MARKET.

Some of the Customs Which Marked the Reigns of the Norman Kings.

The earlier Norman kings lay on straw, and land was held at Aylesbury on condition of finding this commodity for the royal couch. Some of the old tenures were exceedingly comfortable things. The service was nominal and the pay was gold. The king's champion, who rode into Westminster hall to challenge all comers who disputed his master's title, was handsomely rewarded. One of the Russians obtained a grant of land in Dorsetshire for putting away the pieces after playing at chess with the king.

A gentleman at Stafford, who held the king's stirrup when he came to that town, enjoyed a perpetual grant of a fish pond. Some obtained grants on condition of saying a daily paternoster for the throne. Others gave an annual snow ball or an annual rose in exchange for most substantial privileges.

At Norwich—when Norwich was a fishing station, though it is eighteen miles from the sea—there was, by indenture, an annual delivery of herrings to the king. A certain number of fish from the first yield were put in twenty-four "pyes" well flavored with spices, and sent up to town. It was understood that there should be at least five herrings in every pye, but occasionally the officers of the royal household had to complain of short measure.

The wolf and boar hunting tenures involved by no means a nominal service in the early part of our history, nor could the gentlemen in Hants be said to have a sinecure whose business it was "to keep in order the female domestic servants and dismember malefactors." The latter must have been by far the lighter task. Women were always bad to manage until some one invented the art of treating them properly.

The old art of management included the right, or, at any rate, the custom of selling wives in the open market. There is no room for doubt on this subject after many instances which Mr. Andrews has given by chapter and verse. The common people had a notion that a husband might lawfully dispose of his wife in this way, provided he conducted the transaction in some public place and delivered her to the purchaser with a halter about her neck. The sales were duly reported in the newspapers of the period, without any special comment, as items of every day news.

"In some instances market tolls were collected similar to those charged for animals brought to the public market." The business was usually conducted by auction, but now and then it was managed by private tender. One of the lowest prices is six dimes and a quid of tobacco. In one instance a writer ironically instanced the increasing value of women in the market as a certain criterion of advancing civilization, the price of wives at Smithfield having risen from half a guinea to three and one-half guineas.

At Carlisle, in 1832, a farmer offered his wife for sale in the following terms: "Gentlemen, it is her wish, as well as mine, to part forever. She has been to me only a born serpent. I took her for my comfort and the good of my home; but she became my tormentor, a domestic curse, a night invasion and a daily plague." He then thought proper to say a word or two on "the bright and sunny side" of the picture. "She can read novels and milk cows.

"She can laugh and weep with the same ease that you can take a glass of ale when thirsty. She can make butter and scold the maid; she can sing Moore's melodies and plat her frills and caps. I therefore offer her, with all her perfections and imperfections, for the sum of fifty shillings."

Good old times! But stay. In 1882, at Alfreton, Derbyshire, a husband sold his wife in a public house for a glass of beer.—London News,

A TRULY REMARKABLE BRUTE.

Latest Illustrations of the Wonderful Memory of the Elephant.

The sagacity of the elephant is a "chesnut" in all story books for boys, but a recent letter from Europe shows it up in an entirely new light, and incidentally shows that while the sagacity of the brute is indeed wonderful, that of his exhibitor is simply marvelous, besides having the supreme merit of being pecuniarily fruitful. The account runs thus:

The proprietor of the circus announced that on a certain night his elephant would play the Russian hymn on a piano with his trunk. Intense interest was aroused, and when the evening came the expectant public crowded the circus to the roof. After the usual performances four men carried in a cottage piano, which they placed in the center of the arena. Then the intelligent animal was brought in, paraded with much dignity three times around the ring, and then, amid the keenest excitement, advanced to the piano. With a movement of his trunk he touched the keyboard, but hardly had he done so when a surprising change came over him. He trembled with fear and rage, whirled his trunk into the air, and then, with a scream of terror, rushed out of the arena.

There was a graat hurrying to and fro of the employes, and the circus proprietor and the elephant keeper left the ring for consideration. In a few minutes the proprietor returned, and announced with regret that the performance could not take place. The fact was, he said, that the elephant had recognized in the keyboard of the instrument a portion of the tusks of his long-lost mother, who had fallen a prey to the ivory hunters of Africa. He had suggested to the keeper that another piano might be procured, but that expert had informed him that the animal was so overcome with emotion that it would be impossible for it to perform that evening. Under these circumstances he suggested that the "Russian Hymn," followed by the "Marseilleise," should be played by the band. The entertainment was thus brought to a close amid the frantic applause of the audience.—Chicago Dispatch.

SOMETHING TO REMEMBER,

if you're a weak or ailing woman:—that there's only one medicine so sure to help you that it can be guaranteed. It's Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. In building up overworked, feeble, delicate women, or in any "female complaint" or weakness, if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back. It's an invigorating, restorative tonic, a soothing and strengthening nervine, and a safe and certain remedy for woman's ills and ailments. It regulates and promotes all the proper functions, improves digestion, enriches the blood, dispels aches and pains, brings refreshing sleep, and restores health and strength.

Nothing else can be as cheap. With this, you pay only for the good you get.

AN INSANE MOTHER.

What a horrible thing was that at Rogers City, Michigan, last week.

A mother suddenly insane drove a knife into her baby's eyes, destroying the sight at once.

How many a poor woman has broken down under the strain and lost her mind!

It is terrible to think of.

Constipation has wrecked many a home by taking the life of the mother.

This is a thing that many people from a false sense of delicacy suffer with for years.

They should be taught that it is not a light thing but something of grave import.

If they will get a box of the Laxative Gum Drops they will be cured without pain or annoyance.

These gum drops are peculiarly calculated for women, for children and persons with weak stomachs.

Get them of any dealer.

The small boxes cost ten cents, the large ones twenty-five cents.

I am delighted to say that August Flower helped me so that I have quite recovered from my indisposition."

—The Eagle flops about terriably on the school book question. Why don't she quote a little law on the subject? We think it is not law she is after. She intimates that we are alone in our views. So long as the law is in our favor it matters not what the Eagle thinks or says. It is wrong for children to wantonly or carlessly injure their books and it is equally wrong for the board to expel children from school for such damage.

County Cullings.

At a meeting of the county commissioners held, on the 28th of Dec. the bonds of the newly-elected county officers were approved. The county funds were let out to the Wright County Banks for 2½ per cent interest.

D. R. Farnham, Alfred Hoar, Geo. A. Kemper, D. W. Flannigan and John Schifchek were appointed delegates to the Good Roads Convention to meet in St. Paul, Jan. 25 and 26.

The sum of $225. was appropriated to the town of Franklin for roads.

Our county superintendent of schools is charged, by some of the country districts, with having been instrumental in getting their annual school meetings to vote for free text books, and to appropriate a portion of the school funds for that purpose. Even the Eagle claims that the free text books were forced upon the board in Delano. And that the board was forced to buy free text books. There is no law for appropriating school funds for free text books. The legislature is expected to agitate that question this winter. What we need most is officers that will not go outside the law after too many "woodchucks."

Some one has set in circulation concerning the qualifications of Professor B. F. Remington, lately resigned from the Principalship of the Monticello High school, that he could not substantiate his claims to be a graduate, and qualified to hold such a position. On Monday Professor R. happened in to our office when we took occasion to inquire into the matter and were thoroughly satisfied by the exhibition of 1st grade certificates from Ohio, Dakota, and from Wilkin and Hennepin counties in our own state, and from the Monticello High School Board, and a certificate from the State High School Board, signed by Cyrus Northrop, Examiner, and other recommendations, among them a certificate of attendance upon the National Normal University of Lebanon, Ohio, a diploma from which the Prof says he will exhibit to any one who cares to see it, which papers he happened to have with him, that the charges against his not being able to substantiate his claim are without foundation. Those who wish to lower Professor Remington in the eyes of the educational world will have to seek for other means than the lack of certificates and recommendations. He can show a preponderance of testimony of this kind.

FREE text books should be the cry during this session of the legislature. --ST. PETER HERALD.

It is still an open question in the minds of some whether Minnesota went Republican or Norweigan, last fall. The complexion of the administration, however, will settle it.—Midway News.

The democrat papers may fuss and aise all the fuss they can about Davis not going back to the Senate. He will go back and every republican that works to destroy his chances for re-election is puting a screw in his own political coffin.—EDEN VALLEY JOURNAL.

Special to the Globe.

GLENCOE, Minn., Dec. 31.—A young man named Hopper, son of an ex-sheriff of this county, attempted suicide at Hutchinson this morning by cutting his throat with a razor. He inflicted a severe and dangerous wound and, although he is still living, there is but little hope of his recovery.

The $10,000 libel suit of John A. Lovely against H. G. Day, of the Albert Lea Standard, has been withdrawn. Bro. Day may be a good deal of a crank, but if you stay with him to the end, you will find that he is generally right. What is regarded as a crank, in modern politics, is a man who cannot be handled. That is, a crank is one who is not a crank.—Midway News.

Senator Davis is now in St. Paul looking after his senatoral intrest. The newspapers elected him before and prehaps they may again. He is recognised as a ripe scholar, a prefound lawyer, a great orator and a brilliant writer; but in some quarters the question is now being asked, what bill of general interest to the people has he introduced or supported since his election to the United States Senate?—BUFFALO JOURNAL.

Opposition to the re-election of Senator Davis is now no question. To stand by the wishes of the electors who made our legislature Republican with this object in view is a paramount duty of the representatives. And if they are true to there constituency all corruption and collusion to defeat the worthy candidate will be unavailing. Whoever disregards these resolutions and pledges is fit for the severest public reprimand from the people.--WRIGHT COUNTY TIMES.

Senator A. Y. Eaton and the Hon. John A. Holler probably neglected to read the above before the C. K. Davis Caucus, and refrained from going. Give it to 'em Mr. French.

Delano Cemetery Association.

Voting on Principle.

EDITOR GAZETTE:—My first article on the above topic seems to have roused the dormant ideas of friend, John McGary, over in Independence. That article had its desired effect, "hit birds always flutter." Mr. Uppum would say further that according to leading writers on political economy an intelligent vote is the best safeguard to the interests of our country. I ask the gentleman what he thinks of allowing the votes of this country to rule under the following condition viz. not one in ten being capable of reading his ballot or comprehending its effect. The gentleman must know that hundreds and thousands of persons at the election went into the booths and were obliged to ask assistance to aid them in voting, and some, apparently, were ashamed to request help, they then cast a blank. Why not require a qualification in voting as well as in civil service regulations? Our votes are intended for the important purpose of selecting competent and efficient persons to hold responsible positions and who is well adapted to choose these persons, the educated or the ignorant voter? Is there no line to be drawn between the wise man and the fool? Must we return to the dark ages to know where the line shall be drawn? I judge our good friend must be a republican as he upholds the same system as advocated by that party. Our example is, the placing of the ballot in the hands of a million of ignorant blacks who were no more qualified to vote intelligently than the cattle. I consider brother McGary, an intelligent man from his writing. Now, how would you like to cast your ballot on some important question, and then have an ignoramus put in his vote in opposition to yours?

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

SAND.

I observed a locomotive in the railroad yards one day,
It was waiting in the round-house, where the locomotives stay;
It was panting for the journey, it was coaled and fully manned,
And it had a box the fireman was filling full of sand.

It appears that locomotives cannot always get a grip
On their slender iron pavement, 'cause the wheels are apt to slip;
And when they reach a slippery spot, their tactics they command,
And to get a grip upon the rail, they sprinkle it with sand.

It's about this way with travel along life's slippery track,
If your load is rather heavy and you're always sliding back;
So, if a common locomotive you completely understand,
You'll provide yourself in starting with a good supply of sand.

If your track is steep and hilly, and you have a heavy grade
And if those who've gone before you have the rails quite slippery made
If you ever reach the summit of the upper tableland,
You'll find you'll have to do it with a liberal use of sand.

If you strike some frigid weather and discover to your cost,
That you're liable to slip on a heavy coat of frost,
Then some prompt, decided action will be called into demand,
And you'll slip way to the bottom if you haven't any sand.

You can get to any station that is on life's schedule seen,
If there's fire beneath the boiler of ambition's strong machine,
And you'll reach a place called Flushtown at a rate of speed that's grand,
If for all the slippery places you've a good supply of sand.

Richmond Register.

IF the Republicans can find no man with sand to come out against C. K. Davis as a candidate for U. S. Senator let them gaze on our own Senator, A. Y. Eaton. He's the Wright man.

BENJAMIN F. BUTLER, one of the Generals in the war of the Rebellion, died suddenly, on the 10th inst., at his home in Washington. Few men have become better know in the United States than Ben. Butler.

SUNDAY was General Jackson's day, or the anniversary of the battle of New Orleans. It was appropriately remembered as such. In no place, perhaps, is the attention given it that its recurrence receives in the state of Louisiana.

DANIEL W. LAWLER, late candidate for Governor, has been nominated for U. S. Senator to supercede C. K Davis. Having the support of the 47 Democrats in two houses he stands, at present, about as good a show of being elected as does the present incumbent.

The Welsh manufacturers are finding out that we are making our own tin plate.—New York Press.

Are we making our own tin plate? Or are we going without tin, and using wooden and paper and other vessels than those made of tin? Who has seen any thing made of our own tin? We have a small pieces nearly two inches in diameter that is stamped with that "blooming jay" poetry that was so proudly worn by our late Republican congressional committee man for a few days, until we called attention to the fact, when it was handed down until it reached the streets, from whence it was rescued, and now hangs in our office a souvenir of the election of Congressman Baldwin.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 6, 1893

Speaker Crisp still shews the effects of his recent severe attack of indigestion, but he has been able to preside over the House during the short and unimportant sessions held this week. As usual the attendance for the first two or three days after the holiday recess has been small; and the sick list is unusually large, but the work on the appropriation bills, which after all is the main business of this session, is being rapidly pushed. In view of the probable silver fight which may begin any day, Speaker Crisp was asked by a friend which side he would be on. "Neither" was his quick reply. "It is my duty to impartially preside over the House, and, whatever my personal opinion may be, I shall endeavor to do it."

Representative Scott, of Illinois, introduced a resolution this week which is believed to contain a part of the true inwardness of the way in which Secretary Foster has staved off the actual deficit in the Treasury during the last year. It starts out by stating that the Fifty-first Congress provided for the construction or extension of 75 public buildings, and 47 of them have not yet been contracted for; and calls on the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to why so many of these public works have been so long delayed, and why more than $8,000,000 appropriated for this purpose remained unexpended during the last two years. Mr. Scott asked unanimous consent of the House for the immediate consideration of the resolution, but Representative Dingley of Maine, objected, and the resolution was reserved.

Senator Carlisle's friends are beginning to practice calling him Mr. Secretary, as the belief has become general that he has yielded to the pressure brought to bear upon him and agreed to accept the position of Secretary of the Treasury in President Cleveland's cabinet, although he still declines to discuss the matter.

A report became current early in the week that Secretary Elkins intended to issue orders that would have the effect of preventing the regular army making a reputable showing in the Cleveland inauguration parade. A sub-committee from the Inaugural Committee at once waited upon the Secretary, and were assured by him, and also by Gen. Schofield, who was present at the interview, that he had no intentions; on the contrary, he had made up his mind that the regular army should be more largely and better represented than at any previous inauguration since the war. The inaugural ball will be held in the Pension office building.

A man "who went up like a rocket and came down like a stick," is Mr. Thomas H. Carter, who had hardly been heard of outside of his own State until he was made Chairman of the National republican committee, and who, after the election, dropped back into an obscurity still deeper than that from which he has been dragged to be an ornamental figure-head (that was the original intention, but circumstances prevented the manipulation of the wires by the man who laid them, and Carter became the actual head of its committee.) Mr. Carter was in Washington this week trying to clear his late Secretary, ex-Congressman McComas, of Maryland, of certain charges against his integrity which have caused his nomination to be Judge of the D. C. Supreme Court to be hung up for several days in a Senate committee controlled by his own party. Carter's head is several sizes smaller than it was before the election.

It is now conceded, even by the most sanguine republicans, that the Senate of the Fifty-third Congress will be controlled by the democratic party, although several of the necessary votes will come from populists: but, no matter where they come from, the votes will be there to reorganize the Senate on a democratic basis, and to pass any measure which the democratic leaders may agree upon as desirable. That puts the last nail in the coffin of the defunct National republican party; gives the democratic party a lease on the Government so long as it may be guided by wise counsels, to all of which every man who has the future welfare of our country and all of its citizens not a few favored individuals, can conscientiously say Amen!

Representative Outhwaite has introduced a resolution providing for an investigation of the control of certain historical documents on file in the Department of State. This nearly concerns Representative Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts, who will soon be Senator Dawes, successor, as it has been charged that he and his literary partner were through collusion with certain minor officials of the State Department able to prevent other men getting access to historical papers on file in the department until they had published copies of them as portions of certain historical books of which Mr. Lodge is reputed to be one of the authors.

Senator Hill says that not more than seven votes will be cast against the nomination of Murphy to be Senator at the democratic caucus of the New York legislature, to be held next Tuesday night.

CORRESPONDENCE

ROCKFORD RECORDS.

The wood business is quite lively at present.

Other things are at a stand still since the holidays.

Society appears to be taking a rest.

Herman Bugbee and family who have for a couple of years past been living in Washington, returned, Friday night last. There is no place like the big woods of Minnesota. Mr. Bugbee lived here a few years previous to his departure for Washington.

Mrs. P. H. Darrow attended the play in Delano Saturday night.

Mr. Jenkins had a lively time with a couple of dogs which were in search of some of his wolves one days, last week. The dogs were killed after they had been driven home. There seems to be more danger from dogs than wolves.

Mr. J. Johnson, of Minneapolis, held Episcopal services in Breck Memorial, Sunday.

Rev. O. R. Jenks called on old acquaintances here last week, returning to Minneapolis, Saturday.

Miss Ida Smart and Miss Belle Lewis came up from Minneapolis, Monday.

Conzet, Darrow & Son have discontinued their harness shop at Hanover.

Two men were looking over our village last week with a view to starting a general store but could not find a suitable building for the purpose.

Tuesday was the coldest days we have had this winter, the thermometer standing at 24 below.

J. R. Beede is teaching the Hanover school this winter.

M. G. Waren went to Minneapolis, Wednesday.

The W. R. C. cob web social at Mr. S. C. Fredrick's, Monday night was a success. Over sixty people being present. All report a very pleasant time.

H. E. Crandall and wife give a dancing party to their many friends to-night (Wednesday.) Every one anticipates a big time.

MONTROSE MENTIONINGS.

While in Montrose yesterday we learned among other things that the village is thriving as well as usual.

The I. O. O. F's dedicated their new brick hall, on Tuesday evening. A large number of visitors was present.

Presiding Elder Stafford preached and held Quarterly meeting services on Tuesday.

Young's store is tastily arranged and in as good a location as the village affords.

L. K. Flanders was in town, says no common blizzard could keep one of the old 3d Minnesota boys to home.

William Snodgrass, who accidentally shot himself in the shoulder a few years ago, disabled his arm very much repeated the accident last Sunday crippling the other arm

Charles Stolzman is laid up with a severe attack of erysipelas.

George Ruppelius says he has plenty of sausage, made it himself and is keeping near the fire and enjoying city life.

Squire Mapes, Fred Ruppelius and several others were very busy whiling away the hours, in a manner interesting to them.

J. J. Green was working away on that new set of harness.

Miller & Valkenat were doing their share of the business. They salted John Louisianna while we were there.

John Herman has purchased the Henry Wickley property.

Munro Ferrel braved the storm to come to town on business.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Plenty of snow now and the sleighing good; this no doubt, will help revive business a little.

Also, the state legislature, being in session will be another addition to business. We hope, in their deliberations, they will remember the poor and not increase the burden of taxation. The governor said in his message our state was in a healthy condition financially. So we hope the present legislature will favor retrenchment and reform.

The protracted effort at the M. E. church, Armstrong, last week, we learn, has resulted in some good to quite a member.

Quite a good many Independence people attended the quartly meeting of the A. C. church held at Rockford, last Saturday and Sunday.

Road mass meeting at Armstrong, tonight we hope to see a large attendance.

Hope the present legislature will put in a good deal of their time in passing some kind of a dog law, one that is stringent and iron clad, for we are being overrun with dogs; by and by they will be as numerous as the flees of Egypt and of less account.

In last week's GAZETTE, my friend, G. Uppum thought I was a little off about intelligent voting that may be, did not give my opinion as legal authority or anything final, the question I have often thought of but just where to make the dividing line between ignorance and intelligence is the question, many men that can neither read nor write have better judgment about voting than some college graduates. My friend, Uppum, says he thinks I must be a Republican, I am a republican Pharisee nor Sadusee, but a Gentile free born, or rather a democrat of the tribe of Jefferson and Jackson. But the city of Nineyah repented at the preaching of Jonah, and can't say but I may have cause to repent before the next administration is over, but I have strong faith that it will act wisely and give to the people of this country some healthy and durable laws.

Just for the benefit of the farmer the price of wheat has come up a little. There is being a little excitment just now among the farmers in regard to pork and cordwood, these two articles seem to be the stable of production just now; perhaps by another year they will be a drug on the market.

Installation of officers, Gorden Granger Post G. A. R. 120, Maple Plain next Saturday afternoon.

A good many people from Independence attended the monthly stock fair at Delano, last Saturday.

G. N. Elliott expects to have his saw mill in operation before long.

All the schools in Independence seem to be in good running order but think they might be improved by the free text book system.

WAPLE PLAIN MUSINGS.

School opened here in the Presbyterian church with fifty-eight pupils. The school board visited the school and expressed themselves as well pleased with the state of affairs.

Henry Hardt, son of our popular hotel keeper, is very ill. Henry is a good boy and very studious in school and we hope he will soon recover.

Mr. J. A. Henderson has been in our neighborhood for the two weeks and is assisting at the revival services his singing is much appreciated and he has also preached several times during the past few days. He took charge of the Methodist church in Mound City, Sunday evening.

Mr. S. M. Marsh preached a very effective sermon, on Sunday afternoon in the church here.

Rev. E. B. Sherwin assisted by Messrs Grant and Henderson are concluding revival meetings, in Armstrong, they have been very successful many having professed conversion. The Sunday morning services were exceptionally impressive they consisted of a love feast followed by a reception of new members and a testimony meeting. Thirteen new members were added to the church.

Mr. J. A. Henderson will preach at Watertown, Sunday evening.

There was a dance held in Armstrong, Wednesday evening.

A number of our young people attended the dedication of a new schoolhouse near here.

The Odd fellows partook of an oyster supper in Mr. Hardt's hotel, on Saturday evening.

THE site of the city of Boston was sold in 1635 by John Blackstone for $150.

CODFISH are becoming scarce, but the codfish aristocracy is flourishing after its fashion.

A CLEVELAND clockmaker has invented a clock that will run for ten years without winding.

THE death penalty has just been resumed in Switzerland. For twenty-five years it has been abolished.

EX-CONGRESSMEN WILLIAM H. KITCHIN and Robert B. Vance, of North Carolina, will both be members of the next general assembly of that state.

CREDITORS must not approach their debtors by postal cards. A New York tailor has been held in heavy bail for sending a dunning postal card through the mails.

MRS. INCREASE SUMNER, of Starke, Fla., raises her own tea. She gathers three crops a year and the bushes furnish her tea, which in China would cost a princely price.

ARNER MCKINLEY, a brother of the governor, is said to have invented a typewriting electrical machine, which is intended to receive and properly register telegrams without the necessity of a receiving operator.

A COLORADO school-teacher who undertook to preserve discipline by pulling the children's teeth barely escaped a lynching after he had taken out about thirty-five. They will never forget his method for the extraction of roots.

NO WOMAN who wears train skirts can hope to belong to the Equal Suffrage association, for that body as organized in Kansas City has formally condemned them. The dress must not approach the ground at closer range than three inches.

AND once more the report that Emin Pasha is dead is denied. Emin takes his pen in hand to let us know that he is in good health and hopes that these few lines will find us the same. Emin is entitled to thanks for ending the universal anxiety.

WORK on the eleventh census will be completed and the matter turned over to the secretary of the interior by December 31, 1893. The tenth census cost, in round numbers, about $5,000,000, and the present one will cost about $8,100,000, the increase being largely due to the enlarged scope of work.

MME. BERNHARDT met with a very hostile reception in Odessa the other night. While she was going to the theater in her carriage she was attacked by an anti-Semitic mob and showered with sour cucumbers and other missiles. The windows of her carriage were smashed but the tragedienne herself was not hurt.

AN eminent authority has it that the death rate of the world is calculated to be 67 per minute, 4,030 per hour, 96,720 per day, while the rate of births, slightly exceeding the death rate, is calculated to be 70 per minute, 4,100 per hour, 100,800 per day, 36,742,000 a year. The estimated increase per annum is therefore a little over 1,500,000.

THE bronze statue of ex-President Chester A. Arthur, by Ephraim Keyser, which has been in course of execution for the last four months, is now completed and is on exhibition in New York city. The height of the statue is 9 feet 2 inches, and the weight, 1,800 pounds. It has been cast in one piece with the exception of the plinth.

THE telephone has been put to a new use in San Leandro, Cal. A man of intelligence, who is afflicted with leprosy, was isolated in a cabin away from the hospital. A kind-hearted gentleman of the town had a telephone put into the cabin and connected with the reading room of the hospital, thus enabling the leper to talk with, if he might not visit or be visited, by people of the outside world.

IN Mexico you can hire a street-car and ride all over the town in it a whole day by yourself for $3.50, and you can stop at any one place for two hours without extra charge. Not only that, your friends can hire a whole train of these street-cars for your funeral at low rates. There is no other city in the world where you can have such a big funeral with a great deal of show for so little money as in the City of Mexico.

IN 1880 there were 25,000 convicts in prisons and on ticket of leave in England, says the Boston Transcript, but now there are less than 12,000. This reduction, it is asserted, has been accomplished by shipment of criminals to this country, which are carried on through discharged prisoners' aid societies that purchase tickets and outfits for those to be deported, the government paying the expense. It is further stated that judges often suspend sentence on condition that the person convicted shall go at once to the United States. Here is a subject for the investigation of our government.

SAID James Whitcomb Riley to a group of reporters: "I wish you newspaper men wouldn't be quite so careless in your remarks about my looks. I was served with a notice several years ago that I wasn't very handsome, but the reporters take a kind of delight in reminding me of it. It seems to me that you might at least be as considerate as the old auntie who went to the menagerie and saw the hippopotamus. She was staggered for a moment, but her breeding got the better of her impulses. She didn't want to say the animal was ugly, so she turned to her friend exclaiming: 'Sakes a' massy, but ain't he plain!'"

STORIES of the finding of gold fields in the far west are numerous just now. The last is of the Tonto range of mountains in western Arizona, which are said to conceal mines or placers so rich in the precious metal that the Apache Indians, years ago, were wont to use it for bullets. No doubt, says an exchange, many a fellow will be brought down by this bullet story whatever may be the fact respecting the existence of such missiles. It is probably true that gold exists in paying quantities in the unexplored parts of the far western states and territories, but it may be years before it is brought to light.

LATER NEWS.

THE death of Gen. Benjamin F. Butler, the lawyer, statesman, politician and millionaire manufacturer, occurred at his Washington residence, No. 220 New Jersey avenue southeast, at 1:30 the morning of the 11th. The general has always, to a more or less extent, made his residence in Washington, although many of the scenes of his successful ventures have been located elsewhere. During the present winter, a case which had been decided against him in the highest courts of the state of Massachusetts, and in which he took an appeal to the United States supreme court, has demanded his almost constant residence in that city. Every Monday he was a familiar figure at the sessions of that body, when the decisions were handed down. His age, as well as general impairment of health, while listening to the oral decision, looking for his own, was a matter of remark time and time again.

AN awful accident occurred the 10th at Penzance, Cornwall, Eng. While a number of men were at work in the Wheal Owl mine at that place, water suddenly rushed in and drowned many of the miners. As soon as the rush of the water was heard, those who were nearest to the main shaft rushed into the cage and were quickly drawn to the surface. Others, at a distance, were overtaken by the water and their cries could be heard resounding through the galleries. The number of men drowned has been ascertained to be 30.

THE supreme court of Wisconsin, the 10th, affirmed the ruling of Judge Newman in the celebrated state treasury cases, whereby the state recovers some $500,000 interest money from former treasurers.

A LARGE fire occurred in Boston, Mass., the 10th, on Federal street. The firemen battled fiercely, but the fire spread south and east. Ten firms were burned out, causing a loss of about $1,000,000. Five firemen were injured.

Among the injured are: Ferdinand Eiden, roller in rod mill, 28 years old, skull fractured, will die; Mike Schmotcer, Pole, 38 years old, employed at furnace, skull fractured, will die; Jack Nodac, 14 years old, leg injured and badly bruised, will recover.

GOV. ALTGELD was inaugurated at Springfield, Ill., the 10th. For the first time since the organization of the party the republicans gave up control of the state.

DEADLY GAS.

It Explodes in Pittsburgh, Demolishing a Dwelling and Killing Three of the Inmates—Others Injured.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Jan. 9.—By an explosion of gas Saturday a house was wrecked, three persons killed and several injured. The list of the killed is as follows: Thomas Duffy, aged 36, ironworker; Mrs. Sophia Duffy, aged 33; daughter of Mrs. Duffy, aged 2 years.

William Duffy, aged 7, burned and hurt by bricks; William Harris, iron worker, severely burned; Mrs. Harris, hurt by falling walls; child of Mrs. Harris, burned and severely bruised. The explosion occurred in the three-story brick house at 1010 Sarah street, which was jointly occupied by the families of Thomas Duffy and William Harris.

The latter family occupied three rooms on the third floor. Harris goes to work at 7 o'clock. He arose shortly after 6, leaving his wife and child in bed, and taking the scuttle in one hand and a lighted lamp in the other started downstairs to the cellar for coal. The house was closed at the time, as the Duffy family was yet in bed. Harris thought he recognized a smell of gas, but was not alarmed, not thinking of any danger. He opened the cellar door and started slowly down the steps, trying to shield the lamp for fear that a stronger gust of icy air rushing up the stairs into the warmer atmosphere above might blow out the light. Harris reached the bottom of the step, when suddenly the very air seemed turned to fire, which, for a moment, blinded him and caused intense pain. At the same time he felt himself caught up and hurled half way up the steps, while his lighted lamp was shattered against a post.

The neighborhood was shaken then by the terrific explosion, and the few persons on the street saw the house totter for a moment, then the roof fall in, followed by the right wall. The upper floor was crushed in and fell, carrying it to the first, which held, and this alone saved Harris' life. Meanwhile the harvest of death had been awful, for the Duffy family was wiped out of existence, save the young son, and he may die. The second floor, the brick wall and the roof simply crushed the ceiling as though it was paper, and, sleeping calmly in their beds, Thomas Duffy, his wife, and the child in the cradle by their side, were awakened only to be crushed and burned in the ruins. A policeman passing sent in an alarm at once and soon a large force of men were placed at work to rescue the imprisoned inmates. Mrs. Harris and her child were found easily and taken out. They were cut and badly frightened. William Harris was taken out easily, but it took twenty-five minutes to dig to where the Duffys were imprisoned. They were alive when reached, but died as they were being taken out.

CRUSHED BY MOVING ICE.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 9.—The ice gorge in the Ohio river broke Sunday afternoon and the worst fears of the river men have been realized. The moderating weather and the great pressure of the immense fields of ice caused the crash to come earlier than was anticipated. Word comes from Delhi that fifty men are in a perilous position on several coal barges floating down the river. They passed Delhi, 10 miles below Cincinnati, at 7 o'clock. Fears were entertained of a crash between Delhi and North Bend, as the ice in that vicinity was moving slowly and liable to gorge at any time. Collier and Budd, with four barges, were following up right behind.

The gorge that moved past Cincinnati extended from Coney island, above the mouth of the Little Miami, to below Anderson's ferry, a distance of nearly 18 miles. For 2 miles below this the water was clear and open. Then came another gorge, beginning at the mouth of the Great Miami and extending below Lawrenceburg. This lower gorge was about 5 miles long. The upper gorge with its doomed coal fleets crashed into it and tore it out and now both are grinding their way with a terrific roaring far down the Ohio at 5 or 6 miles an hour.

By 9 o'clock p. m. all apparent danger to the steamers at the landing was over. The gorge had passed and the river was comparatively clear. One towboat, the Mattheson, owned by Marmet & Co., valued at $10,000, was sunk and destroyed.

Down below the destruction of coal barges and other property, from accounts at this hour, has been terrible. The harbor towboats Comet, Benwood and Alice Barr were going down with the gorge, fully manned and working heroically to break the ice and save property.

Here is the nearest approach to an approximation of the destruction of coal fleets: Forty-five loaded barges, worth $4,000 each, $180,000; six empty barges, worth $2,000 each, $120,000. Grand total, $300,000.

Add to this a corrected statement of the value of Marmet's towboat Mattheson, which the owner puts at $10,000, and we have a grand total of $310,000. This includes the boats that were carried away last Friday. Not one cent of insurance is held on any of this property.

TWO KILLED OUTRIGHT.

Sleighing Party Run Down by a Train Near Grand Rapids.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Jan. 9.—A Detroit, Lansing & Northern train struck a sleighload of people at Sunfield, 40 miles east of here, Saturday evening, killing two persons outright. They are Mrs. John Schafer, who was horribly mangled, and Mrs. George Osmun. George Osmun is so badly injured that he cannot live and his little son is also terribly hurt, although he may recover. The engine carried the cutter half a mile and when it was stopped the body of Mrs. Osmun was still in it, her skull being crushed.

TOOK BLOODY REVENGE.

A Texas Youth Killed His Father and Stepmother.

HUNTSVILLE, Tex., Jan. 9.—Albert McDonald, aged 20, shot and killed his father and stepmother Friday. He became frenzied in a row with his father over a horse, and seizing a gun shot the old man who was sitting by the fireside, killing him instantly. The woman attempted to escape from the house and she was shot down as she ran. McDonald fled, but bloodhounds from the penitentiary were put on his trail and he was captured in a few hours. He has confessed.

GRAVE CHARGES.

They Are Brought Against Archbishop Corrigan by Archbishop Ireland.

NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—Formal charges of the gravest character have been preferred against Archbishop Corrigan by a brother prelate. He is accused by Archbishop Ireland of having engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to weaken or undo the effect of the pope's decisions in respect to church matters in America, and of having had recourse to methods unbecoming a bishop, designed to discredit and disgrace Archbishop Ireland and Mgr. Satolli, the papal delegate to America. These charges, duly formulated, are now on their way to Rome, where they will be presented to the highest tribunal in the Catholic church.

That tribunal has power to pass upon the accusations and to fix the punishment of the accused if they be sustained. The whole world will eagerly await the decision, for both prelates, the accuser and the accused, have long filled the most conspicuous positions in the American hierarchy. Their differences of opinion have been matter of public rumor for years. Each has very generally been considered as an object of the pope's favorable regard in respect of the new American cardinalate which it is said will be conferred at the approaching jubilee. If Archbishop Corrigan be found guilty as charged his fate as well as the future of the great province of New York, over which he has so long presided, will become the object of eager surmise. Should the charges fail, the consequences can scarcely be less serious to Archbishop Ireland. Nor will the consequences in either case be limited to the provinces of New York and St. Paul.

The differences between Archbishop Ireland and Archbishop Corrigan are of long standing. They date back to the time when the prelate of St. Paul took active part with Cardinal Gibbons in antagonizing Archbishop Corrigan's representations to the vatican on the question of excommunicating the Knights of Labor. This was about five years ago, and since that time Archbishop Corrigan has scarcely made a pretense of perfect accord with either Cardinal Gibbons or Archbishop Ireland. Nor have these prelates taken pains to profess unreserved friendship for his grace of New York. Latterly the difference has been accentuated by the disputes over Cahenslyism and more especially over Archbishop Ireland's famous "Faribault plan" of education. During this latter phase of the quarrel nearly the whole Roman Catholic church in America has been divided between the Corrigan camp and the Ireland camp.

The partners of Archbishop Corrigan in the conspiracy now alleged are priests of his immediate entourage, notably Father Michael Joseph Lavelle, rector of St. Patrick's cathedral, who is expressly named in the charges as a conspirator, and possibly Father Gerardo Ferante, Archbishop Corrigan's Italian secretary.

If the charges have been interpreted aright, Archbishop Corrigan's accusers will try to prove the existence of a conspiracy, of which New York is the center, and which extends in numerous ramifications throughout America, France and Italy. At a meeting held in New York last October, at which Mgr. Satolli was present, peace was thought to have been established between Archbishops Corrigan and Ireland, but the apparent triumph of Archbishop Ireland is said to have rekindled the old bitterness between the two priests.

The secular press began to teem with letters containing damaging statements about Archbishop Ireland, which are said to have emanated from Archbishop Corrigan's friends. When Dr. McGlynn was restored by Mgr. Satolli a few days ago the storm of indignation reached its climax. The daily papers in all parts of the country gave circulation to the most unreserved criticisms and insinuations bearing with no light touch upon Archbishop Ireland and Mgr. Satolli. Upon such evidence as this Archbishop Ireland arrived at the conclusion that he and Mgr. Satolli were the target of a secret, skillful and far-reaching propaganda.

Among the evidences of the supposed conspiracy was the discovery of an attempt made by Archbishop Corrigan to have published in carefully selected papers throughout the west an article written by himself in which an attempt was made to belittle the aims of Mgr. Satolli and Archbishop Ireland in regard to the school question. There were appeals to the various addresses to use such influences as they have to protest against the "unfortunate influence obtained by Archbishop Ireland at Rome" and against Mgr. Satolli's "interference in American Catholic affairs" which is described as "offensive and annoying."

ROME, Jan. 9.—The vatican has caused an inquiry to be made into the motives and the extent of the opposition to the Satolli mission. The pope holds absolutely to his policy that ecclesiastical affairs in the United States shall develop themselves along moderate lines and in a spirit of harmony with the institutions of the United States. From official sources it is learned that all the archbishops who took part in the New York conference have affirmed the fourteen scholastic proposals which Mgr. Satolli placed before them in the name of the pope.

CHICAGO, Jan. 9.—Another transcontinental railroad is completed. Advices from Spokane, Wash., state that the last spike on the Great Northern railway was quietly driven Friday night 13 miles below the summit of Stevens' pass, on the western slope of the Cascade mountains. Shields and Farrell took spike mauls, and with alternate blows drove home the last spike.

THEY HAVE VOTED.

Presidential Electors Perform Their Duties at the Various State Capitals.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The electors chosen last November met in the capitals of the various states at noon Monday to discharge that duty. After having cast their votes for president and vice president these electors will sign three certificates of the result. One of these is delivered to an elector appointed to take charge of it and carry it in person to the seat of government and deliver it to the president of the senate. So far but thirty of the states have complied with the law requiring the result of the vote to be filed with the senate.

The certificates will be opened at 1 p. m., February 8, by the president of the senate, both houses sitting jointly, in the alphabetical order of the states, and handed to the tellers, who will read them and note the result. It is possible that objection may be raised to some of the votes from the states of California, Kansas, Michigan, Ohio, and Oregon, and in this event the law provides that the two houses shall separate, consider the objections and report their findings. After the certificates have all been delivered to the president he will make the proper announcement. This announcement is declared by law, and will be a constitutional declaration of the election of Grover Cleveland and Adlai E. Stevenson. This will conclude all formalities prior to the inauguration.

The result of Monday's voting in the electoral colleges was: Cleveland and Stevenson, 278; Harrison and Reid, 144; Weaver and Field, 22. There were no Cleveland and Stevenson electors nominated, the democrats voting for Weaver and Field.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 10.—The nine republican presidential electors of Minnesota met in the governor's office at noon Monday and cast nine votes for Benjamin Harrison. The popular vote of the state was: Harrison, 122,736; Cleveland, 100,579; Weaver, 30,308; Bidwell, 14,079.

PROBING A VOLCANO.

A Walking-Stick Almost Causes the Destruction of Its Owner.

It was in 1772 that Papandaljan, the Japanese Vesuvius, broke forth in its worst eruption of ashes and scorim, dealing death and ruin over a radius of seven miles; sweeping into eternity 8,000 peaceful inhabitants of the forty villages destroyed, all in a single night, writes Theodore Purdy in the New York Mail and Express.

Next day the sun smiled down upon the scene, and only wreaths of smoke over the blackened ruin of forest and home told the tale.

This morning, after 120 years, I gazed with some emotion at the awful surroundings of precipitous rocky cliffs and descended into the living craters, into the clouds of steam, stepping carefully on the hot crust of lava and sulphur, which burned the soles of our boots. On all sides the miniature craters boiled and thundered with terrifying noises from the center of the mountain. What would be our fate should this frail coating of lava and ashes break under our feet?

One of our party, a champagne manufacturer from Rheims, evidently fond of a "fizz," foolishly poked with his stick above one of these bubbling geysers.

The effect was instantaneous and awful; the earth was rent with a horrible noise of an explosion; he was thrown down, scalded with boiling water, red-hot lava and sulphur. We fell on our hands, expecting instant destruction, but the one burst was the end, and we hastened to our companion, who was badly, though not fatally injured. We left the awful spot, whilst the crater spit forth and roared like an infernal beast. Volcanoes are interesting to read about and explore, but, like buzz saws, are dangerous to meddle with.

The Usual Thing.

The four children had been naughty again and for the dozenth time the mother called them up for reproof.

"You've been very naughty," she said, taking off her slipper, "and I'm sorry you, and I shall have to punish you. Now, where shall I begin?"

"In the same old place, I guess," said one of them, laying himself across her knee.—Detroit Free Press.

Food Made Me Sick

"First I had pains in my back and chest, then faint feeling at the stomach, and when I would eat, the first taste would make me deathly sick. Of course I ran down rapidly, and lost 25 pounds. My wife and family were much alarmed and I expected my stay on earth would be short. But a friend advised me to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and soon my appetite came back, I ate heartily with out distress, gained two pounds a week. I took 8 bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and never felt better in my life. To-day I am cured and I owe it to Hood's Sarsaparilla the whole praise." C. C. ABER, grocer, Canisteo, N. Y.

Mrs. E. J. Rowell, Medford, Mass., says her mother has been cured of Scrofula by the use of four bottles of S.S.S., after having had much other treatment and being reduced to quite a helpless condition of health, as it was thought she could not live.

AN eminent authority has it that the death rate of the world is calculated to be 67 per minute, 4,030 per hour, 96,720 per day, while the rate of births, slightly exceeding the death rate, is calculated to be 70 per minute, 4,100 per hour, 100,800 per day, 36,742,000 a year. The estimated increase per annum is therefore a little over 1,500,000.

IN 1880 there were 25,000 convicts in prisons and on ticket of leave in England, says the Boston Transcript, but now there are less than 12,000. This reduction, it is asserted, has been accomplished by shipment of criminals to this country, which are carried on through discharged prisoners' aid societies that purchase tickets and outfits for those to be deported, the government paying the expense. It is further stated that judges often suspend sentence on condition that the person convicted shall go at once to the United States. Here is a subject for the investigation of our government.

SAID James Whitcomb Riley to a group of reporters: "I wish you newspaper men wouldn't be quite so careless in your remarks about my looks. I was served with a notice several years ago that I wasn't very handsome, but the reporters take a kind of delight in reminding me of it. It seems to me that you might at least be as considerate as the old auntie who went to the menagerie and saw the hippopotamus. She was staggered for a moment, but her breeding got the better of her impulses. She didn't want to say the animal was ugly, so she turned to her friend exclaiming: 'Sakes a' massy, but ain't he plain!'"

STORIES of the finding of gold fields in the far west are numerous just now. The last is of the Tonto range of mountains in western Arizona, which are said to conceal mines or placers so rich in the precious metal that the Apache Indians, years ago, were wont to use it for bullets. No doubt, says an exchange, many a fellow will be brought down by this bullet story whatever may be the fact respecting the existence of such missiles. It is probably true that gold exists in paying quantities in the unexplored parts of the far western states and territories, but it may be years before it is brought to light.

LATER NEWS.

THE death of Gen. Benjamin F. Butler, the lawyer, statesman, politician and millionaire manufacturer, occurred at his Washington residence, No. 220 New Jersey avenue southeast, at 1:30 the morning of the 11th. The general has always, to a more or less extent, made his residence in Washington, although many of the scenes of his successful ventures have been located elsewhere. During the present winter, a case which had been decided against him in the highest courts of the state of Massachusetts, and in which he took an appeal to the United States supreme court, has demanded his almost constant residence in that city. Every Monday he was a familiar figure at the sessions of that body, when the decisions were handed down. His age, as well as general impairment of health, while listening to the oral decision, looking for his own, was a matter of remark time and time again.

AN awful accident occurred the 10th at Penzance, Cornwall, Eng. While a number of men were at work in the Wheal Owl mine at that place, water suddenly rushed in and drowned many of the miners. As soon as the rush of the water was heard, those who were nearest to the main shaft rushed into the cage and were quickly drawn to the surface. Others, at a distance, were overtaken by the water and their cries could be heard resounding through the galleries. The number of men drowned has been ascertained to be 30.

THE supreme court of Wisconsin, the 10th, affirmed the ruling of Judge Newman in the celebrated state treasury cases, whereby the state recovers some $500,000 interest money from former treasurers.

DEADLY GAS.

It Explodes in Pittsburgh, Demolishing a Dwelling and Killing Three of the Inmates—Others Injured.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Jan. 9.—By an explosion of gas Saturday a house was wrecked, three persons killed and several injured. The list of the killed is as follows: Thomas Duffy, aged 36, ironworker; Mrs. Sophia Duffy, aged 33; daughter of Mrs. Duffy, aged 2 years.

William Duffy, aged 7, burned and hurt by bricks; William Harris, iron worker, severely burned; Mrs. Harris, hurt by falling walls; child of Mrs. Harris, burned and severely bruised. The explosion occurred in the three-story brick house at 1010 Sarah street, which was jointly occupied by the families of Thomas Duffy and William Harris.

The latter family occupied three rooms on the third floor. Harris goes to work at 7 o'clock. He arose shortly after 6, leaving his wife and child in bed, and taking the scuttle in one hand and a lighted lamp in the other started downstairs to the cellar for coal. The house was closed at the time, as the Duffy family was yet in bed. Harris thought he recognized a smell of gas, but was not alarmed, not thinking of any danger. He opened the cellar door and started slowly down the steps, trying to shield the lamp for fear that a stronger gust of icy air rushing up the stairs into the warmer atmosphere above might blow out the light. Harris reached the bottom of the step, when suddenly the very air seemed turned to fire, which, for a moment, blinded him and caused intense pain. At the same time he felt himself caught up and hurled half way up the steps, while his lighted lamp was shattered against a post.

The neighborhood was shaken then by the terrific explosion, and the few persons on the street saw the house totter for a moment, then the roof fall in, followed by the right wall. The upper floor was crushed in and fell, carrying it to the first, which held, and this alone saved Harris' life. Meanwhile the harvest of death had been awful, for the Duffy family was wiped out of existence, save the young son, and he may die. The second floor, the brick wall and the roof simply crushed the ceiling as though it was paper, and, sleeping calmly in their beds, Thomas Duffy, his wife, and the child in the cradle by their side, were awakened only to be crushed and burned in the ruins. A policeman passing sent in an alarm at once and soon a large force of men were placed at work to rescue the imprisoned inmates. Mrs. Harris and her child were found easily and taken out. They were cut and badly frightened. William Harris was taken out easily, but it took twenty-five minutes to dig to where the Duffys were imprisoned. They were alive when reached, but died as they were being taken out.

CRUSHED BY MOVING ICE.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 9.—The ice gorge in the Ohio river broke Sunday afternoon and the worst fears of the river men have been realized. The moderating weather and the great pressure of the immense fields of ice caused the crash to come earlier than was anticipated. Word comes from Delhi that fifty men are in a perilous position on several coal barges floating down the river. They passed Delhi, 10 miles below Cincinnati, at 7 o'clock. Fears were entertained of a crash between Delhi and North Bend, as the ice in that vicinity was moving slowly and liable to gorge at any time. Collier and Budd, with four barges, were following up right behind.

The gorge that moved past Cincinnati extended from Coney island, above the mouth of the Little Miami, to below Anderson's ferry, a distance of nearly 18 miles. For 2 miles below this the water was clear and open. Then came another gorge, beginning at the mouth of the Great Miami and extending below Lawrenceburg. This lower gorge was about 5 miles long. The upper gorge with its doomed coal fleets crashed into it and tore it out and now both are grinding their way with a terrific roaring far down the Ohio at 5 or 6 miles an hour.

By 9 o'clock p. m. all apparent danger to the steamers at the landing was over. The gorge had passed and the river was comparatively clear. One towboat, the Mattheson, owned by Marmet & Co., valued at $10,000, was sunk and destroyed.

Down below the destruction of coal barges and other property, from accounts at this hour, has been terrible. The harbor towboats Comet, Benwood and Alice Barr were going down with the gorge, fully manned and working heroically to break the ice and save property.

Here is the nearest approach to an approximation of the destruction of coal fleets: Forty-five loaded barges, worth $4,000 each, $180,000; six empty barges, worth $2,000 each, $120,000. Grand total, $300,000.

Add to this a corrected statement of the value of Marmet's towboat Matthewson, which the owner puts at $10,000, and we have a grand total of $310,000. This includes the boats that were carried away last Friday. Not one cent of insurance is held on any of this property.

GRAVE CHARGES.

They Are Brought Against Archbishop Corrigan by Archbishop Ireland.

NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—Formal charges of the gravest character have been preferred against Archbishop Corrigan by a brother prelate. He is accused by Archbishop Ireland of having engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to weaken or undo the effect of the pope's decisions in respect to church matters in America, and of having had recourse to methods unbecoming a bishop, designed to discredit and disgrace Archbishop Ireland and Mgr. Satolli, the papal delegate to America. These charges, duly formulated, are now on their way to Rome, where they will be presented to the highest tribunal in the Catholic church.

That tribunal has power to pass upon the accusations and to fix the punishment of the accused if they be sustained. The whole world will eagerly await the decision, for both prelates, the accuser and the accused, have long filled the most conspicuous positions in the American hierarchy. Their differences of opinion have been matter of public rumor for years. Each has very generally been considered as an object of the pope's favorable regard in respect of the new American cardinalate which it is said will be conferred at the approaching jubilee. If Archbishop Corrigan be found guilty as charged his fate as well as the future of the great province of New York, over which he has so long presided, will become the object of eager surmise. Should the charges fail, the consequences can scarcely be less serious to Archbishop Ireland. Nor will the consequences in either case be limited to the provinces of New York and St. Paul.

The differences between Archbishop Ireland and Archbishop Corrigan are of long standing. They date back to the time when the prelate of St. Paul took active part with Cardinal Gibbons in antagonizing Archbishop Corrigan's representations to the vatican on the question of excommunicating the Knights of Labor. This was about five years ago, and since that time Archbishop Corrigan has scarcely made a pretense of perfect accord with either Cardinal Gibbons or Archbishop Ireland. Nor have these prelates taken pains to profess unreserved friendship for his grace of New York. Latterly the difference has been accentuated by the disputes over Cahenslyism and more especially over Archbishop Ireland's famous "Faribault plan" of education. During this latter phase of the quarrel nearly the whole Roman Catholic church in America has been divided between the Corrigan camp and the Ireland camp.

The partners of Archbishop Corrigan in the conspiracy now alleged are priests of his immediate entourage, notably Father Michael Joseph Lavelle, rector of St. Patrick's cathedral, who is expressly named in the charges as a conspirator, and possibly Father Gerardo Ferante, Archbishop Corrigan's Italian secretary.

If the charges have been interpreted aright, Archbishop Corrigan's accusers will try to prove the existence of a conspiracy, of which New York is the center, and which extends in numerous ramifications throughout America, France and Italy. At a meeting held in New York last October, at which Mgr. Satolli was present, peace was thought to have been established between Archbishops Corrigan and Ireland, but the apparent triumph of Archbishop Ireland is said to have rekindled the old bitterness between the two priests.

The secular press began to teem with letters containing damaging statements about Archbishop Ireland, which are said to have emanated from Archbishop Corrigan's friends. When Dr. McGlynn was restored by Mgr. Satolli a few days ago the storm of indignation reached its climax. The daily papers in all parts of the country gave circulation to the most unreserved criticisms and inuendos bearing with no light touch upon Archbishop Ireland and Mgr. Satolli. Upon such evidence as this Archbishop Ireland arrived at the conclusion that he and Mgr. Satolli were the target of a secret, skilful and far-reaching propaganda.

Among the evidences of the supposed conspiracy was the discovery of an attempt made by Archbishop Corrigan to have published in carefully selected papers throughout the west an article written by himself in which an attempt was made to belittle the aims of Mgr. Satolli and Archbishop Ireland in regard to the school question. There were appeals to the various addresses to use such influences as they have to protest against the "unfortunate influence obtained by Archbishop Ireland at Rome" and against Mgr. Satolli's "interference in American Catholic affairs" which is described as "offensive and annoying."

ROME, Jan. 9.—The vatican has caused an inquiry to be made into the motives and the extent of the opposition to the Satolli mission. The pope holds absolutely to his policy that ecclesiastical affairs in the United States shall develop themselves along moderate lines and in a spirit of harmony with the institutions of the United States. From official sources it is learned that all the archbishops who took part in the New York conference have affirmed the fourteen scholastic proposals which Mgr. Satolli placed before them in the name of the pope.

Last Spike Driven.

CHICAGO, Jan. 9.—Another transcontinental railroad is completed. Advices from Spokane, Wash., state that the last spike on the Great Northern railway was quietly driven Friday night 13 miles below the summit of Stevens' pass, on the western slope of the Cascade mountains. The only officials present were General Superintendent C. Shields and Superintendent J. D. Farrell. As the last rail was brought forward by workmen and laid in position Messrs. Shields and Farrell took spike mauls, and with alternate blows drove home the last spike.

A Missouri Town's Loss.

ODESSA, Mo., Jan. 9.—Fire broke out in the dry goods store of Burr Bros. Friday night, and almost the entire block on the west side of the street between Dryden and Mason streets was destroyed, causing $75,000 loss. The burned section includes nine business houses and one dwelling.

Frightful Accident in Russia.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 9.—A frightful accident is reported from Eischischek in the province of Wilna. The boiler of the public baths at that place exploded and six persons were instantly killed and fifteen mortally injured.

THEY HAVE VOTED.

Presidential Electors Perform Their Duties at the Various State Capitals.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The electors chosen last November met in the capitals of the various states at noon Monday to discharge that duty. After having cast their votes for president and vice president these electors will sign three certificates of the result. One of these is delivered to an elector appointed to take charge of it and carry it in person to the seat of government and deliver it to the president of the senate. So far but thirty of the states have complied with the law requiring the result of the vote to be filed with the senate.

The certificates will be opened at 1 p. m., February 8, by the president of the senate, both houses sitting jointly, in the alphabetical order of the states, and handed to the tellers, who will read them and note the result. It is possible that objection may be raised to some of the votes from the states of California, Kansas, Michigan, Ohio, and Oregon, and in this event the law provides that the two houses shall separate, consider the objections and report their findings. After the certificates have all been delivered to the president he will make the proper announcement. This announcement is declared by law, and will be a constitutional declaration of the election of Grover Cleveland and Adlai E. Stevenson. This will conclude all formalities prior to the inauguration.

The result of Monday's voting in the electoral colleges was: Cleveland and Stevenson, 278; Harrison and Reid, 144; Weaver and Field, 22. The popular vote for president and vice president cast November 8 was: Cleveland and Stevenson, 5,579,734; Harrison and Reid, 5,144,409; Weaver and Field, 1,016,659; Bidwell and Cranfil, 288,891.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 10.—The twenty-four gentlemen chosens a presidential electors for the state of Illinois met in the senate chamber at 12:30 p. m. and cast the vote of the state for Grover Cleveland, of New York, for president of the United States, and Adlai E. Stevenson, of Illinois, for vice president. David C. Enslow, of Macoupin county, was selected as messanger to carry the vote to Washington. The popular vote of the state was: Cleveland, 426,281; Harrison, 399,288; Bidwell, 25,870; Weaver, 22,207.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 10.—The electors chosen in November met at the state house and cast ten votes for Weaver and Field for president and vice president respectively. The Weaver and Field presidential electors were elected in Kansas by a plurality of 5,874 over the Harrison electors. The popular vote for Weaver and Field was 163,111; for Harrison and Reid, 157,237; for the third party prohibition candidates, 4,539. There were no Cleveland and Stevenson electors nominated, the democrats voting for Weaver and Field.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 10.—The nine republican presidential electors of Minnesota met in the governor's office at noon Monday and cast nine votes for Benjamin Harrison. The popular vote of the state was: Harrison, 122,736; Cleveland, 100,579; Weaver, 30,308; Bidwell, 14,079.

COLUMBUS, O., Jan. 10.—Twenty-two members of the Ohio electoral college voted for Benjamin Harrison for president and one for Grover Cleveland. The highest vote cast by the respective political parties at the presidential election in November was: Republican, 405,187; democrat, 404,415; prohibition, 26,012; people's party, 14,850. Lorenzo Danford, chairman of the meeting, received the highest republican vote at the November election, and James P. Seward, of Mansfield, who was at the head of the democratic ticket, the highest cast by his party. The vote was by the Australian ballot. Seward is the first democratic presidential elector in Ohio since 1852.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 10.—The electoral vote, as officially recognized by the Wisconsin electors, was: For Cleveland, 177,335; for Harrison, 176,791; for Weaver, 9,909; for Bidwell, 13,132; scattering, 129. The twelve electoral votes were therefore cast for Cleveland.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 10.—Claude Matthews succeeded Ira J. Chase as governor of Indiana at 1:30 p. m., the oath of office being administered by Supreme Justice Coffey. The presidential electors met and cast the ballot of the state for Cleveland and selected Albert Lieber as messenger. The official vote of the four parties for presidential nominees is: Cleveland, 262,740; Harrison, 255,615; Weaver, 22,208; Bidwell, 13,050.

DES MOINES, Ia., Jan. 10.—The electoral college met at Des Moines at noon and organized with E. M. Remley chairman and E. D. Chassell secretary. After all preliminary work had been done the ballot was cast, giving Harrison the solid vote of the college, which was 13 electoral votes. PROBING A VOLCANO.

A Walking-Stick Almost Causes the Destruction of Its Owner.

It was in 1772 that Papandaljan, the Japanese Vesuvius, broke forth in its worst eruption of ashes and scoriæ, dealing death and ruin over a radius of seven miles; sweeping into eternity 8,000 peaceful inhabitants of the forty villages destroyed, all in a single night, writes Theodore Purdy in the New York Mail and Express.

Next day the sun smiled down upon the scene, and only wreaths of smoke over the blackened ruin of forest and home told the tale.

This morning, after 120 years, I gazed with some emotion at the awful surroundings of precipitous rocky cliffs and descended into the living craters, into the clouds of steam, stepping carefully on the hot crust of lava and sulphur, which burned the soles of our boots. On all sides the miniature craters boiled and thundered with terrifying noises from the center of the mountain. What would be our fate should this frail coating of lava and ashes break under our feet?

One of our party, a champagne manufacturer from Rheims, evidently fond of a "fizz," foolishly poked with his stick above one of these bubbling geysers.

The effect was instantaneous and awful; the earth was rent with a horrible noise of an explosion; he was thrown down, scalded with boiling water, red-hot lava and sulphur. We fell on our hands, expecting instant destruction, but the one burst was the end, and we hastened to our companion, who was badly, though not fatally injured. We left the awful spot, whilst the geysers spit forth and roared like an enraged beast. Volcanoes are interesting to read about and explore, but, like buzz saws, are dangerous to meddle with.

The Usual Thing.

The four children had been naughty again and for the dozenth time the mother called them up for reproof.

"You've been very naughty," she said, taking off her slipper, "and I'm ashamed of you, and I shall have to punish you. Now, where shall I begin?"

"In the same old place, I guess," said one of them, laying himself across her knee.—Detroit Free Press.

Food Made Me Sick

"First I had pains in my back and chest, then faint feeling at the stomach, and when I would eat, the first taste would make me deathly sick. Of course I ran down rapidly, and lost 25 pounds. My wife and family were much alarmed and I expected my stay on earth would be short. But a friend advised me to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and soon my appetite came back, I ate heartily without distress, gained two pounds a week. I took 8 bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and never felt better in my life. To-day I am cured and I owe it to Hood's Sarsaparilla the whole praise of it."—C. C. ABER, grocer, Canisteo, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—I desire to make a brief statement for the benefit of the suffering. I had been afflicted with catarrh of the head, throat and nose, and perhaps the bladder for fully twenty-five years. Having tried other remedies without success, I was led by an advertisement in the Sentinel-Democrat to try Hall's Catarrh Cure. I have just finished my fourth bottle, and I believe I am right when I say I am thoroughly restored. I don't believe there is a trace of the disease left. Respectfully,

LOVE AND WEATHER.

When, in the budding of the year,
To Love of love I chanced to sigh;
"'Tis spring," she whispered in my ear,
"You'll feel much better by and by."

And when, in summer's golden hours,
I said my heart was all aglow,
She smiled as sweetly as the flow'rs
And murmured: "Summer, don't you know."

And later, when the leaves fell down,
And I rehearsed my heartfelt tale,
She said, but with a little frown:
"The day is dull and you are pale."

I sadly waited. Christmas came,
And with the bells my love I told;
Said she: "This wintry night's to blame,
I'm sure you're suff'ring from the cold."

Oh, grant, ye powers of destiny,
That she and I may meet together,
In some strange land that's fair to see,
But wholly destitute of weather!

IN THE FURROW.

The Sermon That Secured Rev. Moulton a Good Wife.

When the new minister arose in his pulpit and announced his text, the congregation settled themselves in the pews with an air of satisfaction. They were confident that they were about to listen to a fine sermon, and they were not to be disappointed. They admired and esteemed Rev. Thomas Moulton, who had come to them from a country parish which his liberal views and talents had outgrown. Modest and sincere, the young man appealed to his hearers, by his good sense and by the simple beauty of his thoughts. In thundering oratorical power he was deficient, but his voice was clear and pleasant, his manner was earnest and pleasing. When he addressed an audience, he won their confidence, and they believed him to be what he was, a thorough gentleman, a man cherishing high ideals and sympathizing warmly with the trials of his fellow men.

Rev. Mr. Moulton was unusually happy in the sermon to which particular reference has been made. He spoke feelingly in behalf of the thousands who are the victims of an unfavorable environment, who are prevented by thwarting circumstances from attaining those places in society in which their naturally high qualities of mind could best flourish. There was a strange inequality in life. Choice gifts and excellent opportunities often fell to the lot of dull or ignoble persons who failed to use them properly; on the contrary, these good things were as frequently unaccountably withheld from those to whom they were admirably adapted. Fortunately, of the millions in the world who lived in poverty, squalor and ignorance, the greater part did not possess keen sensibilities and ambition, and consequently did not experience the suffering which tender-hearted but unphilosophic persons imagined for them. Indeed, the capabilities of this large class of people were so limited that when they were sometimes placed by zealous philanthropists in a sphere higher than that to which they were accustomed, they became positively miserable and longed to return to a lower condit on. Nevertheless, a gradual improvement in the environment of the masses was accompanied by a like improvement in these people themselves. Therefore the fact that they were so largely wonted to their present condition did not excuse the more fortunate from ceasing their endeavors to elevate them. The millions deserved attention, but inasmuch as they did not suffer acutely, and in many instances were happier than were people above them, it was not necessary to lie awake nights for the purpose of devising plans in their behalf. But in the same environment with the millions were thousands of superior people who were the great sufferers, and who deserved speedy and generous aid and sympathy. They were daily and vainly making desperate efforts to overcome the circumstances that thwarted them. They were fitted for something better and they longed to attain it, but there was some lack, either of health, of money, of energy or of something else which prevented them from escaping from their unfavorable surroundings. Only the strongest and best equipped, unaided, surmounted greatest obstacles. Yet there were hundreds of others not less worthy, although less able, who, if they should receive timely assistance, could climb the heights that now discourage them. Strange to say, the last-mentioned class, although they deserved the most attention, received the least. The unpromising poor were pitied and given alms and the successful great were lauded. But those who were gravely but ineffectually struggling against adverse circumstances were coolly ignored. It was the much and undeservedly neglected class, the noble unfortunate, whose claims for sympathetic aid from the Christian world were greater than those of any other portion of humanity.

To elucidate his subject in a manner as effective as possible, the preacher employed several illustrations. One of them briefly outlined was as follows:

One day a farmer while walking over a freshly-plowed field, espied in a furrow something which glittered. He bent down and picked up a diamond ring. There were spots of dry mud on the rim, and the once clean ornament looked neglected and weather-beaten. A few years before the farmer found it, it had been lost by a rich city woman during a rural ramble. The farmer took the ring home, washed it, burnished it, and then it looked as beautiful as when it was new. He restored it to the owner and she wore it again.

Thus was it returned to its proper place, where it could fulfill the purpose for which it was made, viz., to be an ornament, to be a thing of beauty for the admiration of all observers. But had the farmer not chanced to go by, or had he mistaken the diamond in the ring for a shining bit of quartz, and been too indifferent to make an examination, the ring would have remained in the furrow, it would have been left to its obscure fate. Soon it would have been covered with earth and rubbish, and would have continued in the wrong place forever.

The speaker next proceeded to an analogy. He contrasted the story of the ring with the story of a poor girl. Her parents were refined and intelligent, she herself was refined and sensitive, her earliest years were passed in comfort, and in surroundings suited to her tastes. But when she was fourteen years old, her parents died, she was left destitute, there was no near relatives to take care of her, and she was obliged to go to work in a factory in order to support herself. The other girls in the factory were commonplace, not a few of them were vulgar, and some were vicious. The best ones were good-hearted, but they did not understand their proud and sensitive companion, who did not readily mingle in their conversation and amusements. The girl was unhappy; she could not be otherwise in such circumstances, and yet she was too weak and too friendless to better her condition. She tried to read and improve her mind during the winter evenings, but the severe work in the factory during ten and sometimes twelve hours daily fatigued her so much that she found it almost impossible to gratify her ambition. Moreover, the woman with whom she boarded was ignorant, and the house was unclean and uncomfortable, so that the home life of the girl was unfavorable for the development of her higher tastes. Not singular, then, was it that she finally became desperate and began to yield to the weight of the circumstances that oppressed her. The vulgar talk of her companions no longer shocked her, and she gradually adopted words and expressions which formerly nothing would have induced her to use. She was deteriorating. Like the ring in the furrow, the best in her was becoming dim. She was out of her proper sphere and she knew it. She longed to escape from her present condition, to save herself from mental and perhaps moral ruin, to mingle with better people and to enjoy congenial surroundings; but of what avail was it for her to battle longer?

Fortunately at this critical period in the girl's career a rich and philanthropic man who lived near the factory became interested in her. He ascertained that her parents had been refined people, and that the hereditary traits in her family were good. He comprehended the circumstances surrounding her, and saw the temptations to which she was exposed. He recognized in her a gem in obscurity, which only needed some person able and appreciative enough to place it where it ought to be. Accordingly he adopted her as his daughter, gave her a good education and other advantages. She became a noble and accomplished woman, and her benefactor felt well repaid for his kindness. But what could be said in regard to many cases like that of this girl, where no helping hand was extended? It was sad to think of these cases. The fate of the individuals involved was similar to what the destiny of the ring would have been, had it not been found by the farmer.

The audience, most of them well-to-do persons, were much impressed by the sermon. One wealthy member of the church was especially impressed. It happened that he had become interested in a girl whose circumstances in life were almost identical with those of the one whose story the pastor had related. The man had thought of adopting her as his daughter, but he had been restrained by selfish considerations. It only needed the sermon to overcome his reluctance, and he immediately decided to carry out his philanthropic plan the next day. Now it chanced that the poor girl whom the rich man had in mind also heard the sermon, she occupying one of the free seats near the vestibule during the services. She, of course, was astonished, and wondered whether the preacher had heard of her and had founded his story on her experience. She dared not hope, however, that she would be fortunate like the poor girl in the story, and have a helping hand extended to her. Great then were her amazement and joy when the benevolent man came to her and made his proposition. She accepted it with profound gratitude. Her new guardian was especially anxious that she should be well educated, and it was not long before he sent her to a noted boarding-school in another city. At the end of five years, Mary, that was her name, returned to her benefactor, a beautiful and accomplished young woman.

Every Sunday Mary accompanied her adopted father to church and listened to the preaching of Rev. Thomas Moulton. The minister noticed with delight that the fair young woman appeared to appreciate his sermons very much. Soon he began to cultivate her acquaintance, and made such rapid progress that friendship ripened into love with surprising celerity. He was more humble-minded than are most preachers, however, and he was disheartened by a fear which many manly men have felt. He feared that he was not good enough to become the husband of a superior woman.

In the course of a stumbling speech in which he acquainted Mary with his desires he said:

"I love you, but I feel that you are too good for me."

Mary looked at him in an encouraging and affectionate way.

"If you knew how great my obligation to you is, you would have more courage," she replied.

"What do you mean?" he eagerly asked.

"I was in the furrow, and had it not been for you I would have remained in it to this day."

The worthy clergyman was mystified. An explanation was in order. Mary recalled the sermon and told what it had done for her.

Mr. Moulton was greatly pleased and, inasmuch as he was to obtain a good wife by means of this sermon, he declared that it was the best one he had ever preached.—J. A. Bolles, in Boston Budget.

Wonderful Echoes.

In the Roman Campagna, at the Sepulchre of Metella, wife of Sulla, there is an echo which repeats five times each being in a different key. It will also repeat a hexameter line, or another sentence which can be spoken in two and a half seconds. On the banks of the river Naha, between Bingen and Coblentz, there is an echo capable of repeating a sentence seventeen different times. A peculiarity of this echo is that, although the original word of sentence be uttered in a whisper, yet the volume of sound increases many fold in the echo. In the chapel of the Abercorn family, at Paisley, the closing of the door produces a sound which roars like distant thunder. The echo at the "Eagle Nest," Killarney, Ireland, repeats a bugle note at least one hundred times. Between the two wings of the castle of Simonetta two miles out from Milan, the report of a pistol shot is repeated sixty times. At the same place a single musical instrument produces the effect of a full orchestra.—Philadelphia Press.

A QUAINT SCENE IN GOTHAM.

Friday Afternoon Marketing in the Heart of the Jewish Quarter.

Between Grand street and East Broadway Norfolk street is one of the most picturesque thoroughfares of the city. It is in the heart of the Jewish quarter, and is a great marketing place. Every night the stores, the street stands, and the peddlers' wagons do a lively business, and on Friday afternoon, just before the first three stars in the sky proclaim the arrival of the Sabbath, the scene has some of the aspects of Saturday in the big markets of the town. The basement stores are really nothing more than cellars, having been originally used as such and only recently remodeled for their present purposes. Nearly all are occupied by bakers and the proprietors can be seen hustling around attending to their customers with their sleeves rolled up above their elbows and their persons and clothes covered with flour. There are also bread stands upon the streets. Nearly all of the bread used in this quarter is made of rye flour, and the crust is baked very hard and brown. The loaves, which are round or oblong, shade from light yellow to a very dark brown, and they look clean and appetizing.

The street is filled with children, from toddling infants to boys and girls twelve and thirteen years old. Very few boys above the age of thirteen can be seen at play, because after a Jewish boy arrives at the age of thirteen he is supposed to have taken on man's estate, and with it the cares and dignity of a man. Most of the peddlers' carts contain vegetables, which usually look questionable. These and the meats and fish cause occasional raids on the part of the board of health.

Other interesting features of Norfolk street are the tobacco stores and stands. Cigars are not as prominent in the display as in ordinary places, but the long-cut Turkish and Russian tobacco for cigarette and pipe use appear to be most popular. The cigarette habit seems to have taken hold of the population of this quarter to a remarkable degree, as the stained fingers of most of the men and youths attest.

The cigar stands, however, labor under a disadvantage on Fridays, because smoking is one of the things forbidden on the Sabbath, and the patrons therefore buy few smoking materials on Friday. As soon as evening comes the vegetable carts disappear, and so do the street stands, while most of the shops are locked up. With the approach of darkness the children also disappear, and the street becomes very quiet.—N. Y. Sun.

A DEAD FAILURE.

He Was Equal to Both Sides, but Could Get Neither.

The fellow with a big lump in his windpipe and a birthmark on his left ear lost no time in announcing that he wanted some life insurance.

"Can't seem to make anything out of existing in this world," he explained, with an effort to be cheerful, "and I'd like to see if dying won't be more profitable."

The clerk smiled obligingly and opened a book.

"What's the state of your health?"

The fellow with the lump in his windpipe seemed deeply affected.

"Bad," he replied in a lachrymose voice.

The clerk closed his book.

"We can't insure any one in bad health," he quietly observed.

"Hey?"

"Can't insure you. Good day."

"Can't insure me at all, eh?"

"No."

"All right. Now I want to make you a proposition. I'll bet you even I don't die inside of a year."

The clerk looked startled and shook his head.

"Well, I'll bet even I do die inside of a year."

"No, I don't want to bet."

"I'll give you odds either way."

"No. Good day."

Hope fled from the visage of the fellow with a big lump in his windpipe. Dejected and miserable he left the office.

"A failure in life, a failure in death," he muttered.

No one ever remembered seeing him afterward.—Detroit Tribune.

"RING OUT, WILD BELLS."

The Origin of One of Tennyson's Most Famous Poems.

Early in 1889 the Tennysons left Somersby for Beech Hill house, near High Beech, on the skirt of Epping Forest. Down in the hollow, a couple of miles or so away, stood the old Norman pile of Waltham Abbey, with its memories of Harold, the last of the Saxon kings, and its famous old peal of bells. As the time drew near the birth of Christ the poet heard them pealing through the mist—strange voices, unlike the music of the four Lincolnshire hamlets. A week later they bore him a happier message as the old year passed away:

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky!
Ring out the grief that saps the mind
For those that here we see no more!
Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

Pleasant it is to know that while we owe "Tears, Idle Tears," to Tintern Abbey, we are indebted to the old tower of Waltham Holy Cross for the jubilant anthem of the bells. In 1840 the Tennyson family removed to Tunbridge Wells, and in the following year to Boxley, near Maidstone, a locality associated with the closing section, the splendid epithalamium, of the "In Memoriam." For here, in October, 1842, the poet's youngest sister, Cecilia, was married to Edmund Law Lushington, professor of Greek in Glasgow university. Glimpses of Park House, the seat of the Lushingtons, are preserved, too, in the prologue to "The Princess."—Good Words.

LOVE AND WEATHER.

When, in the budding of the year,
To her of love I chanced to sigh;
"'Tis spring," she whispered in my ear,
"You'll feel much better by and by."

And when, in summer's golden hours,
I said my heart was all aglow,
She smiled as sweetly as the flow'rs
And murmured: "Summer, don't you know."

And later, when the leaves fell down,
And I rehearsed my heartfelt tale,
She said, but with a little frown:
"The day is dull and you are pale."

I sadly waited. Christmas came,
And with the bells my love I told;
Said she: "This wintry night's to blame,
I'm sure you're suffering from the cold."

Oh, grant, ye powers of destiny,
That she and I may meet together,
In some strange land that's fair to see,
But wholly destitute of weather!

IN THE FURROW.

The Sermon That Secured Rev. Moulton a Good Wife.

When the new minister arose in his pulpit and announced his text, the congregation settled themselves in the pews with an air of satisfaction. They were confident that they were about to listen to a fine sermon, and they were not to be disappointed. They admired and esteemed Rev. Thomas Moulton, who had come to them from a country parish which his liberal views and talents had outgrown. Modest and sincere, the young man appealed to his hearers, by his good sense and by the simple beauty of his thoughts. In thundering oratorical power he was deficient, but his voice was clear and pleasant, his manner was earnest and pleasing. When he addressed an audience, he won their confidence, and they believed him to be what he was, a thorough gentleman, a man cherishing high ideals and sympathizing warmly with the trials of his fellow men.

Rev. Mr. Moulton was unusually happy in the sermon to which particular reference has been made. He spoke feelingly in behalf of the thousands who are the victims of an unfavorable environment, who are prevented by thwarting circumstances from attaining those places in society in which their naturally high qualities of mind could best flourish. There was a strange inequality in life. Choice gifts and excellent opportunities often fell to the lot of dull or ignoble persons who failed to use them properly; on the contrary, these good things were as frequently unaccountably withheld from those to whom they were admirably adapted. Fortunately, of the millions in the world who lived in poverty, squalor and ignorance, the greater part did not possess keen sensibilities and ambition, and consequently did not experience the suffering which tender-hearted but unphilosophic persons imagined for them. Indeed, the capabilities of this large class of people were so limited that when they were sometimes placed by zealous philanthropists in a sphere higher than that to which they were accustomed, they became positively miserable and longed to return to a lower condit on. Nevertheless, a gradual improvement in the environment of the masses was accompanied by a like improvement in these people themselves. Therefore the fact that they were so largely wonted to their present condition did not excuse the more fortunate from ceasing their endeavors to elevate them. The millions deserved attention, but inasmuch as they did not suffer acutely, and in many instances were happier than were people above them, it was not necessary to lie awake nights for the purpose of devising plans in their behalf. But in the same environment with the millions were thousands of superior people who were the great sufferers, and who deserved speedy and generous aid and sympathy. They were daily and vainly making desperate efforts to overcome the circumstances that thwarted them. They were fitted for something better and they longed to attain it, but there was some lack, either of health, of money, of energy or of something else which prevented them from escaping from their unfavorable surroundings. Only the strongest and best equipped, unaided, surmounted greatest obstacles. Yet there were hundreds of others not less worthy, although less able, who, if they should receive timely assistance, could climb the heights that now discourage them. Strange to say, the last-mentioned class, although they deserved the most attention, received the least. The unpromising poor were pitied and given alms and the successful great were lauded. But those who were gravely but ineffectually struggling against adverse circumstances were coolly ignored. It was the much and undeservedly neglected class, the noble unfortunate, whose claims for sympathetic aid from the Christian world were greater than those of any other portion of humanity.

One day a farmer while walking over a freshly-plowed field, espied in a furrow something which glittered. He bent down and picked up a diamond ring. There were spots of dry mud on the rim, and the once clean ornament looked neglected and weather-beaten. A few years before the farmer found it, it had been lost by a rich city woman during a rural ramble. The farmer took the ring home, washed it, burnished it, and then it looked as beautiful as when it was new. He restored it to the owner and she wore it again.

Thus was it returned to its proper place, where it could fulfill the purpose for which it was made, viz., to be an ornament, to be a thing of beauty for the admiration of all observers. But had the farmer not chanced to go by, or had he mistaken the diamond in the ring for a shining bit of quartz, and been too indifferent to make an examination, the ring would have remained in the furrow, it would have been left to its obscure fate. Soon it would have been covered with earth and rubbish, and would have continued in the wrong place forever.

The speaker next proceeded to an analogy. He contrasted the story of the ring with the story of a poor girl. Her parents were refined and intelligent, she herself was refined and sensitive, her earliest years were passed in comfort, and in surroundings suited to her tastes. But when she was fourteen years old, her parents died, she was left destitute, there was no near relatives to take care of her, and she was obliged to go to work in a factory in order to support herself. The other girls in the factory were commonplace, not a few of them were vulgar, and some were vicious. The best ones were good-hearted, but they did not understand their proud and sensitive companion, who did not readily mingle in their conversation and amusements. The girl was unhappy; she could not be otherwise in such circumstances, and yet she was too weak and too friendless to better her condition. She tried to read and improve her mind during the winter evenings, but the severe work in the factory during ten and sometimes twelve hours daily fatigued her so much that she found it almost impossible to gratify her ambition. Moreover, the woman with whom she boarded was ignorant, and the house was unclean and uncomfortable, so that the home life of the girl was unfavorable for the development of her higher tastes. Not singular, then, was it that she finally became desperate and began to yield to the weight of the circumstances that oppressed her. The vulgar talk of her companions no longer shocked her, and she gradually adopted words and expressions which formerly nothing would have induced her to use. She was deteriorating. Like the ring in the furrow, the best in her was becoming dim. She was out of her proper sphere and she knew it. She longed to escape from her present condition, to save herself from mental and perhaps moral ruin, to mingle with better people and to enjoy congenial surroundings; but of what avail was it for her to battle longer?

Fortunately at this critical period in the girl's career a rich and philanthropic man who lived near the factory became interested in her. He ascertained that her parents had been refined people, and that the hereditary traits in her family were good. He comprehended the circumstances surrounding her, and saw the temptations to which she was exposed. He recognized in her a gem in obscurity, which only needed some person able and appreciative enough to place it where it ought to be. Accordingly he adopted her as his daughter, gave her a good education and other advantages. She became a noble and accomplished woman, and her benefactor felt well repaid for his kindness. But what could be said in regard to many cases like that of this girl, where no helping hand was extended? It was sad to think of these cases. The fate of the individuals involved was similar to what the destiny of the ring would have been, had it not been found by the farmer.

The audience, most of them well-to-do persons, were much impressed by the sermon. One wealthy member of the church was especially impressed. It happened that he had become interested in a girl whose circumstances in life were almost identical with those of the one whose story the pastor had related. The man had thought of adopting her as his daughter, but he had been restrained by selfish considerations. It only needed the sermon to overcome his reluctance, and he immediately decided to carry out his philanthropic plan the next day. Now it chanced that the poor girl whom the rich man had in mind also heard the sermon, she occupying one of the free seats near the vestibule during the services. She, of course, was astonished, and wondered whether the preacher had heard of her and had founded his story on her experience. She dared not hope, however, that she would be fortunate like the poor girl in the story, and have a helping hand extended to her. Great then were her amazement and joy when the benevolent man came to her and made his proposition. She accepted it with profound gratitude. Her new guardian was especially anxious that she should be well educated, and it was not long before he sent her to a noted boarding-school in another city. At the end of five years, Mary, that was her name, returned to her benefactor, a beautiful and accomplished young woman.

Every Sunday Mary accompanied her adopted father to church and listened to the preaching of Rev. Thomas Moulton. The minister noticed with delight that the fair young woman appeared to appreciate his sermons very much. Soon he began to cultivate her acquaintance, and made such rapid progress that friendship ripened into love with surprising celerity. He was more humble-minded than are most preachers, however, and he was disheartened by a fear which many manly men have felt. He feared that he was not good enough to become the husband of a superior woman.

In the course of a stumbling speech in which he acquainted Mary with his desires he said:

"I love you, but I feel that you are too good for me."

Mary looked at him in an encouraging and affectionate way.

"If you knew how great my obligation to you is, you would have more courage," she replied.

"What do you mean?" he eagerly asked.

"I was in the furrow, and had it not been for you I would have remained in it to this day."

The worthy clergyman was mystified. An explanation was in order. Mary recalled the sermon and told what it had done for her.

Mr. Moulton was greatly pleased and, inasmuch as he was to obtain a good wife by means of this sermon, he declared that it was the best one he had ever preached.—J. A. Bolles, in Boston Budget.

Wonderful Echoes.

In the Roman Campagna, at the Sepulchre of Metella, wife of Sulla, there is an echo which repeats five times each being in a different key. It will also repeat a hexameter line, or another sentence which can be spoken in two and a half seconds. On the banks of the river Naha, between Bingen and Coblentz, there is an echo capable of repeating a sentence seventeen different times. A peculiarity of this echo is that, although the original word or sentence be uttered in a whisper, yet the volume of sound increases many fold in the echo. In the chapel of the Abercorn family, at Paisley, the closing of the door produces a sound which roars like distant thunder. The echo at the "Eagle Nest," Killarney, Ireland, repeats a bugle note at least one hundred times. Between the two wings of the castle of Simonetta two miles out from Milan, the report of a pistol shot is repeated sixty times. At the same place a single musical instrument produces the effect of a full orchestra.—Philadelphia Press.

A QUAINT SCENE IN GOTHAM.

Friday Afternoon Marketing in the Heart of the Jewish Quarter.

Between Grand street and East Broadway Norfolk street is one of the most picturesque thoroughfares of the city. It is in the heart of the Jewish quarter, and is a great marketing place. Every night the stores, the street stands, and the peddlers' wagons do a lively business, and on Friday afternoon, just before the first three stars in the sky proclaim the arrival of the Sabbath, the scene has some of the aspects of Saturday in the big markets of the town. The basement stores are really nothing more than cellars, having been originally used as such and only recently remodeled for their present purposes. Nearly all are occupied by bakers and the proprietors can be seen hustling around attending to their customers with their sleeves rolled up above their elbows and their persons and clothes covered with flour. There are also bread stands upon the streets. Nearly all of the bread used in this quarter is made of rye flour, and the crust is baked very hard and brown. The loaves, which are round or oblong, shade from light yellow to a very dark brown, and they look clean and appetizing.

The street is filled with children, from toddling infants to boys and girls twelve and thirteen years old. Very few boys above the age of thirteen can be seen at play, because after a Jewish boy arrives at the age of thirteen he is supposed to have taken on man's estate, and with it the cares and dignity of a man. Most of the peddlers' carts contain vegetables, which usually look questionable. These and the meats and fish cause occasional raids on the part of the board of health.

Other interesting features of Norfolk street are the tobacco stores and stands. Cigars are not as prominent in the display as in ordinary places, but the longest Turkish and Russian tobacco for cigarette and pipe use appear to be most popular. The cigarette habit seems to have taken hold of the population of this quarter to a remarkable degree, as the stained fingers of most of the men and youths attest.

The cigar stands, however, labor under a disadvantage on Fridays, because smoking is one of the things forbidden on the Sabbath, and the patrons therefore buy few smoking materials on Friday. As soon as evening comes the vegetable carts disappear, and so do the street stands, while most of the shops are locked up. With the approach of darkness the children also disappear, and the street becomes very quiet.—N. Y. Sun.

A DEAD FAILURE.

He Was Equal to Both Sides, but Could Get Neither.

The fellow with a big lump in his windpipe and a birthmark on his left ear lost no time in announcing that he wanted some life insurance.

"Can't seem to make anything out of existing in this world," he explained, with an effort to be cheerful, "and I'd like to see if dying won't be more profitable."

The clerk smiled obligingly and opened a book.

"What's the state of your health?"

The fellow with the lump in his windpipe seemed deeply affected.

"Bad," he replied in a lachrymose voice.

The clerk closed his book.

"We can't insure any one in bad health," he quietly observed.

"Hey?"

"Can't insure me at all, eh?"

"No."

"All right. Now I want to make you a proposition. I'll bet you even I don't die inside of a year.

The clerk looked startled and shook his head.

"Well, I'll bet even I do die inside of a year."

"No, I don't want to bet."

"I'll give you odds either way."

"No. Good day."

Hope fled from the visage of the fellow with a big lump in his windpipe. Dejected and miserable he left the office.

"A failure in life, a failure in death," he muttered.

No one ever remembered seeing him afterward.—Detroit Tribune.

"RING OUT, WILD BELLS."

The Origin of One of Tennyson's Most Famous Poems.

Early in 1880 the Tennysons left Somersby for Beech Hill house, near High Beech, on the skirt of Epping Forest. Down in the hollow, a couple of miles or so away, stood the old Norman pile of Waltham Abbey, with its memories of Harold, the last of the Saxon kings, and its famous old peal of bells. As the time drew near the birth of Christ the poet heard them pealing through the mist—strange voices, unlike the music of the four Lincolnshire hamlets. A week later they bore him a happier message as the old year passed away:

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky!

Ring out the grief that saps the mind
For those that here we see no more!

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

Pleasant it is to know that while we owe "Tears, Idle Tears," to Tintern Abbey, we are indebted to the old tower of Waltham Holy Cross for the jubilant anthem of the bells. In 1840 the Tennyson family removed to Tunbridge Wells, and in the following year to Boxley, near Maidstone, a locality associated with the closing section, the splendid epithalamium, of the "In Memoriam." For here, in October, 1842, the poet's youngest sister, Cecilia, was married to Edmund Law Lushington, professor of Greek in Glasgow university. Glimpses of Park House, the seat of the Lushingtons, are preserved, too, in the prologue to "The Princess."—Good Words.

A DISTURBANCE

isn't what you want, if your stomach and bowels are irregular. That's about all you get, though, with the ordinary pill. It may relieve you for the moment, but you're usually in a worse state afterward than before.

This is just where Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets do most good. They act in an easy and natural way, very different from the huge, old-fashioned pills. They're not only pleasanter, but there's no reaction afterward, and their help lasts. One little sugar-coated pellet for a gentle laxative or corrective—three for a cathartic. Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, Dizziness, Sick and Bilious Headaches, are promptly relieved and cured.

They're the smallest, the easiest to take—and the cheapest pill you can buy, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned.

MAN WAS MADE TO MOURN.

The poet Burns contemplating the hard life of the Scotch peasant said "Man was made to mourn."

Man was made to rejoice.

Mourning comes, but only at intervals.

When the veins are filled with blood, and the system is at the proper pitch, life is full of enjoyment.

Every thing seems to rejoice in the very thought of life.

Existence only becomes insupportable when disease sets in and overpowers the system.

Then life becomes distasteful and wearisome.

If you feel this way, oppressed with gloomy thoughts and borne down by the weight of sorrow, get a box of the Laxative Gum Drops and take them according to directions. You need adopt no particular precautions in regard to them but take them until your digestion is regulated and your system is in its normal condition and in perfect health.

—Fresh Oysters at C. H. Green & Co's Grocery.

—On Thursday evening a Delano lady made no less an important discovery than that a comfortable rocker with a ball of yarn containing a crochet needle don't make a good seat. Be careful where you leave your knitting, or stand up.

—A Greenwood gentleman is authority for the fact that the Eagle is trying to kill Delano. He says they advertise the Soo road and do not even give a time table of the Great Northern. That is not the first accusation of the kind against the bird.

—We are in receipt of the January number of the "Cosmopoliton" which contains an article on "The Making of an Illustrated Magazine, "Four Famous Artists," "Japan Revisited," "Beauties of the American Stage," "The Confessions of an Autograph-Hunter," "The English Laureates." "The Muses of Manhattan," "Grant under Fire," "Co-operative Industry," and several others all interesting and instructive. The Magazine and this paper can be had at this office for $3.40 a year. Now is the time to subscribe.

—Miss Mabel Parsons, organist at the M. E. church, was agreeably surprised on Monday evening by the arrival of a house full of the M. E. church goers at the family residence. A very pleasant evening was spent. Refreshments were brought along by the ladies of the party and everybody seemed happy. During the evening Rev. Davies, on behalf of her many friends presented Miss Mabel, with a handsome set of orange spoons, a napkin ring, and a minature boot, as tokens of regard and esteem, and as a birthday present.

—"Did He Do Right!" is the caption of an interesting article in this week's Eagle which we are informed was written by Wm. Hawley Smith, and selected by Superintendent Lindsley for publication. Had either the writer or the selector read the proof it is fair to presume instead of an exclamation point an interrogation would have followed the question. We enjoyed reading the article, very much, especially the portion of the teacher's soliloquy where he says: "There is such a thing as law in this country, and our young folks have that fact sometime." We would add that it would be well for older persons not to forget the same fact, or, remembering, disregard it. The question we answer, yes.

—On Monday, we had the pleasure of making a short visit in each department of our public school. And must say that it has the appearance of being as well regulated, and of doing as good work as is to be found. The principal, Professor Dewey, was hearing a class in grammar which was, he informed us to lay aside this science for that of botany as soon as their books arrive. He also discussed "Caesar," and "Equations" with some of his pupils, the latter study at the recess time.

In the grammar department Miss Quinn exhibited her large class in arithmetic in as fine shape as you can find anywhere. It was astonishing to see some of the smaller pupils solve, rapidly, and correctly, examples that would puzzle many of our business men Miss Q. makes kind of a "hobby" of mathmetics.

Miss McCalpin who came here nearly a stranger impressed us as being an earnest worker, her classes in language especially the girls, showed considerable drilling. She gave them a very thorough lesson in the use of the comma. We are of opinon that Miss McCalpin has the most trying position of any in the school.

The Primary Department presided over by Miss Cheeley is fully up to the times, as the many new devices, and new methods of keeping the little ones interested plainly shows. Miss C. has good command over her pupils which goes a long way toward giving them a good start in their educational life. Scarcely a pupil in the school, except new comers, but can look back to the time when they learned their A B C's of Miss Cheeley, and all with the kindest remembrances.

There are entirely too few visitors to our schools. Parents especially and others knowing the value of an education should make it a point to visit occasionally and show a little interest in the education of their children. Give them a call you will be welcome and will not regret the time spent in this way.

—The Redmond & Del Vecchio Dramatic Company after playing three nights and a Saturday matinee to good houses and giving general satisfaction, left, on Monday, for Howard Lake where they are to remain three nights.

—On our recent visit to school we were pleased to see most of the pupils that had been expelled present, and at work. The board has done a wise thing in re-instating them, in accordance with the school laws. And we hope they will study hard and try to make up lost time as nearly as possible.

—The assessment of damage to Alva George Catlin's geography about which the Eagle has spent so much of her time and talent, turns out to be under the new rules, 15 cents. Considering the fact that the book had been used before he took charge of it. that he has used it all this term and that his other books are not damaged, it don't appear that he can be so guilty of insubordination as the Eagle intimates. Besides the fact that he claims to have no knowledge of how the ink got onto the book, and it is fair to suppose it happened in the same way as other cases known to have occurred by the ink coming from the inkwells.

—The Board of Education had a meeting, on Friday evening, at the post office. We did not find it out until Sunday. But from the minutes learn that they made a new rule, that all children can come to school. That is in accordance with the state law. But they will not allow the children to use the books bought with district money until they pay the actual damage done the book, this of course, is not in accord with state laws. If there is a damage done school property, it must, according to the state law be settled before a justice of the peace, as other damages are. The school officers have no right under existing laws to buy text books, and, if they do buy them with public money, the "Sinking fund" or other funds belonging to the district they must settle their damages in some other way, than depriving the pupil of his books, bought with district money, and as much his, as is the school house, or seats, or any other school property. Of course this arrangement is better than the other, but a boy or girl in school needs books, and if they are to be free the district must supply them, at least until it is shown that they have intentionally destroyed them.

Minutes of Meeting of the Delano Board of Education.

DELANO, Jan. 5.—Board of Education met at post office. Present Messrs. Vorse, Erickson, Cunningham, Gutzwiller and Maxfield. Meeting called to order by Mr. President Vorse.

Moved and seconded that the teachers are hereby instructed to assess the actual damage done by any pupil or pupils to any of the text book or books belonging to the district, at the actual damage done to the same and notify parent or guardian of the amount so assessed and, on receipt of such notice, if the parent or guardian refuse to pay the same as assessed then the whole of the books be taken away from the pupil that has damaged said book, until such time as such assessed damage shall be paid.

Provided further that the said pupil doing the damage shall be allowed to attend school with or without providing their own books during good behavior as the parent or guardian may elect.

It is further provided that if the parents or guardians and teachers do not agree as to the actual damage so assessed then the parent or guardian can appeal to the committee on text books for final settlement. Carried.

IRELAND TALKS.

In Relation to the Alleged Conspiracy Against Him.

Archbishop Ireland is quoted as having given out the following interview yesterday:

"It is not proper for me to talk publicly of the 'conspiracy' against Mgr. Satolli and myself. I am not the sole one attacked; the arrows winged toward me are bidden to seek higher victims, some of whom, even, are higher than Mgr. Satolli. Archbishop Ireland, however, as an American, asks the editors of American newspapers whether it be worthy of their sense of justice and fair play to lend their columns to annoymous writers seeking to besmirch men whom position and duty invest with solemn responsibilities.

"If," continued the prelate. "Archbishop Ireland and Archbishop Satolli, or others higher than they, deserve that war be declared against them, they have the right to this much consideration. That no cowards afraid to uplift their banners and herald aloud their names be allowed to send toward them through the air their poisoning missiles. I protest against honorable newspapers admitting into their columns anonymous articles, the manifest intent of which is to injure and misrepresent. For my own part, I declare that I have no dread of the arena provided it be open to the public eye. But I will not at any time lower my lance to strive for opponents who lie away obscured in corners and subterranean holes."—Pioneer Press.

SOWING THISTLES.

I once had a neighbor, named Ellen McCarty,
Who was pious, and sober, and good to the poor;
Her sons were well trained, her cottage as tidy
As any on hill-side, or valley, or moor.

One fault had poor Ellen—the truth must be spoken,
A tongue that from gossiping never could rest;
And over and over, to her father confessor,
This sin with all others was always confessed

At last he grew weary of warning and chiding,
Of penitent promises, penance and prayer,
For he felt in his soul, if the woman to heaven
Should be taken, dissensions would follow her there.

He gave her one day a thistle-top bidding
As penance, "Go scatter the seeds in the air;"
And when she came back with a smile at his weakness,
He bade her at once, to bring them back to him there.

'Nay, nay," cried the women with tears of vexation,
"T'would take me from now, till the end of my life"
"Amen," said the father confessor, "then gather
The seeds you have scattered of scandal and strife."

The defendants claim the bonds were illegally issued. The case will be tried at the April term.

Reciprocity, which the Democratic party has pledged itself to destroy, increased the sale of American goods in Porto Rico from $2,591,800 during the last fourteen months before reciprocity took effect to 33,097,737

for the first fourteen months after.—New York Press.

If Reciprocity does so much for our Porto Rico trade what is the matter with having it with all countries? Would not all countries buy our goods, wares and farm products, if we would open our markets for their articles of commerce? When Germany and other European countries saw fit to exclude our pork was not the price cheap, there at home? And when they took off their restrictions was it not better for both countries? Cannot the European now enjoy the "fat" of our land while we can, in exchange, make use of many things he is as glad to get rid of as we are of our pork? If free trade with Porto Rico is good, free trade with the balance of the world can't be very bad.

To the criticism that schools were not as good as they used to be, that boys now were educated in a way that made them superficial and fit only for ordinary and sub-ordinate positions, a wise and observant man made reply, that the schools were as good as ever, but the boy now had not the same advantages as the boy of fifty years ago; then there were no large towns, but everybody lived on farms or in villages and the boy had his share of work to perform; this manual labor developed his powers of observation, his eye and his hands were trained to precision. A bruised thumb would illustrate the difference between hitting the nail on the head and "pretty near" hitting it on the head, and a remembrance of this object lesson would induce the boy to solve his problem instead of "pretty near" getting it right. In no other way can the necessity for precision, for adequately adapting means to an end, be so successfully learned as by manual labor. And as success in any vocation is essentially the result of adapting means to an end, it follows that manual labor is an important element in intellectual culture. Herein we find why great men have come from the farm.—The Northwestern Agriculturist.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

"MY RUTHERS."

I tell you what I'd ruther do—
Ef I only had my ruthers—
I'd ruther work when I wanted to
Than be bossed round by others.
I'd want to kind o' git the swing
O' what was needed first, by jing!
Afore I sweat at anything!
Ef I only had my ruthers.
In fact, I'd aim to be the same
With all men as my brothers,
And they'd be all the same with me,
Ef I only had my ruthers.
The poor 'ud git their dues sometime—
Ef I only had my ruthers—,
And be paid dollars 'stid o' dimes.
For children, wives and mothers;
Their boy 'at stokes; their girl 'at sews—
For others, not herself, God knows!
The grave her only change of clothes!
Ef I only had my ruthers.
They'd all have "stuff" and time enough
To answer one another's
Appealin' prayer fer "lovin, care"—
Ef I only had my ruthers.
They'd be few folks 'ud ast fer trust—
Ef I only had my ruthers.
And blame few business men to bust
Theirselves or hearts of others;
Big guns 'at come here durin' fair
Week could put up jest anywhere
And find a full and plenty there.
Ef I only had my ruthers;
The rich and great 'ud 'sociate
With all their lowly brothers
Feelin' we done the honorun—
Ef I only had my ruthers.

—James Whitcomb Riley.

Objections to Free Text Books.

As our district has been trying the free text book system we feel able to speak on the subject from experience. It is our belief that a great deal of trouble is bound to follow the adoption of Free Text books.

FIRST: Books are too perishable altogether, to hold teachers and scholars responsible for.

SECOND. It is too difficult a matter to ascertain who did them damage.

THIRD. School books are not in the hands of the scholar more than six hours out of twenty-four.

FOURTH. They are handled by other scholars, teachers, janitors and even visitors, and sometimes, roughly.

FIFTH. After they have been used a term by some pupils, they are actually repulsive objects to many children.

SIXTH. They act as a means of spreading infectious diseases among the pupils.

SEVENTH. With many people the books used at school, and from which they learned their lessons are treasured up, and often looked over, with the fondest recollections of the happiest hours of their lives, and they prefer to own and keep them.

EIGHTH. Nothing gives children more manliness or womanliness than to be the possessor of their own books. It is natural for people to be more careful of their own things than of others.

A BILL is to come before the legislature this winter asking members to vote to re-imburse those who have signed their names to paper to raise an extra $50,000. over and above what the legislature voted two years ago. To make a display at the World's fair. This is a very bad precedent to establish. It opens the doors for all kinds of jobs. Had the legislature seen fit to make a display of $100,000 value no doubt they would have voted to do so. Because the committee have seen fit to exceed the appropriation and have prevailed upon some of the business men in each county to sign paper pledging themselves to assist in case the legislature did not is no good reason for the reconsideration of the vote or the value of an additional $50,000. Don't begin to pay out the State funds in this way.

List of Patents

Granted to Minnesota inventors this week. Reported by C. A. Snow & Co. Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, Opp. U. S. Patent Office, Washington, D. C:

C. Cameron, Minneapolis, meat cutter; M. H. Crittenden & F. V. Emery, Minneapolis, metallic lathing; A. T. Crossley, Duluth, advertising device for glass vessels; H. Dahlman, Cambridge, capo tasto; P. A Deslauriers, St. Paul, securing sheet metal fronts to walls of buildings; C. J. Dion, St. Paul, starching machine; G. W. Dorrance, St. Paul, reversible gate for water-ways; A. M. Erickson, Cork, machine for welding plow irons; L. A. Hathaway & E. W. Elkins, Kenyon, sash-holder; C. S. Hume, Detriot, hanger for electric lamps; G. H. Jessup, Tracy, fire screen; J. McGarth, Minneapolis, combined flax thrasher and card; M. E. McKee, St. Paul, automatic brake-adjuster; C. D. Pruden, St. Paul, sheet-metal molding machine; C. A. Stark, Duluth, closed-conduit electric railway.

STEPHEN W. WHITE is the name of California's new democratic United States Senator.

SENATOR JOHN G. CARLISLE is said to have expressed a willingness to accept the Treasury portfolio at the hands of Grover Cleveland.

REV. DR. RHEELDAFFER, of Red wood Falls, a prominent Presbyterian minister. For 18 years head of the State Reform school died, on Tuesday.

SEVERAL bills concerning the holding of caucuses and elections and election expenses have been introduced into the legislature this winter. Some of them appears at first reading quite absurd, and out of place.

SOME of the Republican organs are saying, the voice of the people re-elected Cush. K. Davis. From the familiar names given, of those present at the time the joint session was held it would seem the politicians had a hand it in.

WONDER if Senator C. K. Davis will now obey the instructions of the Minnesota Senate to our members of the U. S. House and Senate and work for a prompt foreclosure of the Government mortgage on the Union Pacific Railroad.

THE Litchfield News-Ledger says some of the High School boys have been indulging in a hazing scrape. Depriving one of their number of his hair by shearing it off because they didn't like the style. This is wrong, boys. Don't do so any more.

THE report of the new capitol committee don't meet the hearty approval of everybody. The St. Paul News and the Midway News think that the limiting of the site to three-fourths of a mile from the present location is not right. It does look considerably schemy.

DOCTOR GIBSON has unearthed quite an item of interest to the Minneapolitan by publishing the fact that the city pays for about seven years time not served by policeman on the sick list. The Saw dust city must be an unhealthy place, or a policeman's occupation a sickly one, or somethings else is the matter.

THE Republican papers are Hollering terribly. They claim "boodle" was freely used in the senatorial contest. This spoils the reputation of our legislature for this season. Every measure a man don't like he has, probably, as good a right to charge up to "boodle." It is about time we elect our U. S. senator by another plan.

AN ELECTORIAL COLLEGE elected for the express purpose of voting for United States senator, similar to the Presidential Electorial college, and consisting of a member from each Congressional District with one at large where the congressional districts happen to be of even number would be an improvement on the present arrangement, which casts such odium on our legislative body.

WHEN one reads of the presence of old wheel-horses of the Republican party from all over the state and of their being seated on the floor of the House of Representatives in close proximity to supposed weak members, for the purpose of giving the Senatorial electorial college back bone, it looks as if the legislators had a little bit of a spinal column of their own they would arrange for room for visitors, on such occasions, where this charge could not be brought against them.

REPRESENTATIVE WINSTON, of Minneapolis, has introduced a Text book law to the legislature. It is quite lengthy and covers considerable ground. It provides for the purchase of text books by school boards, with funds raised for that purpose, and the sale or loan of the same to the pupils. The sale to be at or as near first cost as possible. First cost to be as little as the same books can be bought for anywhere. He claims that in large cities, it would making a saving of from 20 to 40 per cent in the cost of books.

Tariff Pictures.

In 1860 free trade could find a foreign market for only $4,272,500 worth of beef products. In 1892, under the McKinley tariff, $34,436,169 worth of America beef products were sold abroad.—New York Press.

It is not this country improved in 33 years? Have we been laboring and toiling and developing the resources of this country for the last third of a century without expecting to sell more beef, more wheat, more pork and more of every other product of our country than we did in the days before the war? Is it strange then that about 8 times as much beef product leaves our country now as did 30 years ago.

Among Our Exchanges.

We are anxious to see how our legislature will act with regard to the world's fair obligations which were contracted with the understanding that "the legislature would undoubtedly make appropriations to cover the amount." The people who signed those notes did so of their own volition and ought to pay them.—St. Peter Herald.

ON Sunday last Archbishop Ireland delivered a fine sermon at the Cathedral in St. Paul his subjects were atheism, profanity and the lightness with which people regard an oath. It is needless to say he did the subjects justice. We give a few extracts from the published sermon:

"Turn now to Almighty God. He is the supreme being, gathering into himself supreme goodness, grandeur and beauty. He is, moreover, the Lord and master, in whom we live, move and have our being; his love bears us up at every step we make, his favors never cease their outpourings upon us. Respect is due to him. To fail in honoring him is to deny our dependency upon him, to deny his grandeur and supremacy, to steel our hearts against all beatings of love and gratitude. The anthem coursing through the pages of the inspired record of revealed religion is that of praise, adoration and thanksgiving for God, and we are taught by it that in paradise, intelligences live in the fullness of nature, and duty, that the elect praise uninterruptedly the most high."

I will not say that profaning the holy names is ungentlemanly, boorish, the act of a besotted mind and a callous heart; but I will repeat, it is sinful before the most high; it is basest ingratitude in presence of divine love.

"I do not pause to explain the deep malice of perjury. Perjury is the invocation to God to attest as truthful the false saying upon human lips. It is an awful sin. For God is essentially truth, and to connect him with false hood is the deepest of injury to his being and majesty. All laws divine and human condemn perjury; earth and heaven hold it in abomination. But I would speak of this oath-taking, unceremonious in form, irreverent in tone and manner, which reveals a soul verging upon impiety, or utterly oblivious of God's majesty. The taking of an oath is a solemn invocation to the Deity. The more sacred formula is: 'So help me God.' When the wording is simply, 'I so swear;' all men understand that the import of the words is the same. How heedless of respect the administration of oaths, the taking of oath! How hurried the speaking! How quick and commonplace the motion of the hand! Not in this manner do we address fellow men whom we respect. Have we no respect for Almighty God? I think that when this irreverent oath-taking is not an evidence of existing irreligion, it leads rapidly thither. Men in position, upon whom the administration of oaths devolves, should see that God be not despised; that the most solemn pledge of human veracity, the most binding social force in human communings, be not shorn of due sacredness and power. Where an oath is administered, God is present, the ground upon which we tread is holy, and the air we breathe is perfumed with heavenly saintliness.

"Honor to whom honor is due. To God be honor supreme and love most generous."

Midway's Accessibility.

Midway News, Jan. 14.

There are no less than twenty members, clerks, and others, employed about the legislature in the capitol this winter who reside in the Midway District, prominent among whom are Attorney General Childs, State Grain Inspector A. C. Clausen. Tams Bixby, the governor's private secretary; Rev. I. C. Fortin, chaplain of the house; Hon. D. M. Sullivan, Hon. Levi S. Tyler, and several other representatives. The entire Minneapolis delegation is, twice the distance we are from the capitol, the lieutenant governor, and the entire Minneapolis contingent about the capitol live at home, and travel back and forth to the capitol night and morning without inconvenience, but the old St. Paul crowd insists that to locate the new capitol more than half a mile from them will be an unpardonable outrage. The Midway News is not booming a new capitol, but when the state does decide to re-build it ought to exercise a little common sense about the site.

Printers' Pecularities.

A printer may have a bank and quoins and never be worth a cent; have caps and small caps and have neither wife nor children; others may run, but he gets along faster by setting. He may make impressions without eloquence, and still tell the truth. Though others cannot stand and set, he can set standing, and do both at the same time; may use furniture and have no dwelling; may make and put away pi, yet never see nor eat a pie. A human being, he may be a rat at the same time: may handle a shooting iron, yet know aught of a gun, cannon or pistol. He may lay his form on the bed, yet be compelled to sleep on the floor; may use a dagger without shedding blood; faom earth may handle stars; and he may have a sheep's foot and never be deformed.—Exchange.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 13, 1893

Have Treasury officials been redeeming counterfeit money? Such is the natural presumption after reading a special report submitted by Treasurer Nebeker to Secretary Foster this week. This report shows that the amount paid out by the Treasury in redemption of $500 notes, series of 1874, exceeds by $54,000 the total amount issued of that series, whereas it is usually the case that the amount paid out for the redemption of any series of notes is always less than the total amount issued of that series, for the very natural reason that many notes are burned up or lost where they are never found. And what adds to the probability of counterfeit notes having been redeemed by Treasury officials with good and lawful money is the fact that there was a dangerous counterfeit $500 note known to have been put in circulation about 1874. Treasurer Nebeker endeavors to explain by saying that through an error notes of another series may have been counted as in that of 1874, and expresses the opinion that this fact will be clearly shown when the series of 1875 shall have all been presented for redemption. It is very natural that Mr. Nebeker should try to make this explanation, as Mr. Cleveland's Secretary of the Treasury may feel that it will be his duty to compel Mr. Nebeker or his bondsmen to make good that $54,000.

The death of Senator Kenna, of West Virginia, which occurred Wednesday morning, although not unexpected, has cast a gloom over his colleagues, with whom he was a general favorite, both on account of his marked ability and his genial personality. His death makes the fourth in the membership of the Senate—Plumb, of Kansas, in December, 1891; Barbour, of Virginia, in May, 1892; and Gibson, in December, 1892—since the Fifty-second Congress began its first session. The funeral services, which were conducted by Cardinal Gibbons, assisted by Bishop Keane, were held in the Senate chamber yesterday afternoon, and the large attendance of prominent people attests the esteem in which Senator Kenna was held. The remains left here for West Virginia, where the interment will be made last night, accompanied by a joint committee of Senators and Representatives.

The House committee on Banking and Currency has favorably reported a bill repealing the present law for the monthly purchase of silver bullion, and it is understood that the committee on Rules will report a special order setting a time for its consideration, but there is a doubt, even among those who favor the bill, as to whether it can be brought to a vote. It certainly cannot, unless a majority of the House will vote for a resolution amounting in effect to a cloture rule, and even if it gets through the House, Senator Teller has on the floor of the Senate given notice that the free coinage Senators will not allow it to go through the Senate. On the whole, present indications do not favor the adpotion of any silver legislation at this session.

The House this week voted down Representative Crain's joint resolution changing the date for the meeting of Congress to December 31, and for the inauguration of President to April 30.

Friends of the Quarantine bill, which passed the Senate this week, are already actively at work in the House, and they hope to get a special order for its consideration reported from the committee on Rules. The bill authorizes the President to suspend immigration and the importation of merchandise whenever he deems it necessary to keep out contagious and infectious diseases.

Ex-Speaker Reed has been keeping rather quiet this session, but he made a little speech in the House this week in which he stated a truth that ought to be carefully studied by the democratic leaders of the present as well as of the next House. He said: "If the House wants to do business, it can always find plenty of time to do it in; if it does not wish to do business, it can find eternity not to do in." Mr. Reed has said few things during his Congressional career that your correspondent could endorse, but this statement must be endorsed by every unprejudiced observer of the work of Congress.

The House committee on the Columbian Exposition is this week hearing both sides on the proposed repeal of the law enacted at the last session prohibiting the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday. Both sides are presenting strong arguments from their respective points of view, but it appears that the Sunday openers are a little ahead when one converses with members of Congress. The committee will almost certainly report in favor of Sunday opening.

The sudden death of Gen. B. F. Butler, on Wednesday morning, at his residence in this city, removes a man, who has at times played a conspicuous part in American affairs.

The Captain Was Not What His Looks Led Us to Look For.

PINK was not called Pink because he was pretty. I have heard of people who were pretty as pinks, but Pink Dyer was not one of these. It was his hair, most likely. That and his eyebrows were of that peculiarly brilliant yet undecided shade of red which cannot be described by any other word (of sufficient brevity) than "pink"; so "Pink" he was called, and so remained to the end of the chapter.

I first met him on a Union Pacific train going west. He was full of faith and hope and charity then.

The way I came to notice him first was through his asking me, at the Omaha station, a question concerning the time the train was due to leave. He was so homely, so dreadfully homely, and yet so "good" looking, that he attracted my attention as soon as he spoke; and, after I heard his voice (it was a "good" voice Pink had), I took a fancy to study him.

When the train started I walked through to see if there was anyone on board I knew, and in the smoker, with only two or three fellow-passengers, I again found Pink. He smiled at me, and said "Good evening" in a pleasant way; so I sat down by him and lit a cigar.

"Going west?" I asked, by way of opening the conversation.

"Yes," he answered, promptly; "going to Coloraydo."

"Yes? Ever been there before?"

"Nope; I'm a tenderfoot, I reckon," he smiled. Then he added: "I s'pose it's a pretty tough country—have you been there?"

"Oh, yes; I live there."

"Well, how is it—any chance f'r a feller t' git plenty work?"

"Yes, if he wants it."

"That's good; that's what I want."

Then, in his innocent, confiding way, he went on to tell me how it was he came to be going out west—the whole story. It was a sad story, and yet not really a new one—a tale of an improvident father and a family of small children, of the death of the father and the efforts of the widow and the older children to get along, and their troubles in doing so.

Pink was the oldest—he was eighteen. Then there were Min, fifteen; Grace, eleven; Frank and Freddie, the twins, ten; Ted, eight, and Fan, the baby, five.

Pink (his name was George) and Min could help a little; but there was not much they could get to do in the little country town they lived in, and, besides, Min did not like to work. "Ye see," said Pink, deprecatingly, "she's a girl, an' hain't been brought up t' work, 'xactly, an'—well, ye can't 'xpect girls t' hanker after work much, nohow. An' th' rest of 'em, ye see, they're pretty little—pretty little yet." And Pink smiled in a paternal sort of fashion.

We talked on other subjects for awhile. Then Pink, after a silence of some minutes, said earnestly, with a slap of his fist on his bony knee: "All I want—all I want is t' see all o' them young uns fixed an' settled in good shape, an' well started, an' then—then I c'n go home an' settle down an' look after mother."

He left the train at Julesburg—he had some prospect of getting work near there, he told me—and I saw nothing of him for over two years. Then, one day, coming down Sixteenth street, in Denver, I met him. He had not changed a bit, and he remembered me at once when he saw me. I asked after his mother and the "young uns," in a little while; Pink's eyes lighted up, and his face broadened into a smile.

"Fine!" he said; "fine! "I git a letter every week, an' they're all gittin' on good. I'm goin' home pretty soon; been hopin' I c'd go t' Min's weddin'—she's goin' t' git married next November—but I don't reckon I c'n make it. Ye see, these here women, they've got t' rag out a lot an' git heaps o' things t' git married in, so I got t' rustle t' keep Min staked in good shape; I want my sister t' have as good as they is—wouldn't you?"

Almost a year later I met him again. Neither he nor his smile had changed. "Gosh! I'm glad t' see ye!" he ejaculated. "D'ye know, it seems most as if you was an old neighbor of our'n, I feel t' know ye so well."

We took lunch together, and I asked him how he was getting along and how the "folks" were.

"Oh, I'm still punchin' cows," he said, "an' joggin' along, same ol' gait. Oh, yes, I git a letter every week yit. Mother's doin' first rate, an' th' young uns gittin' on fine. Min's got a darn good man, I guess. Gracie's a big girl, most growed now, an' Frank an' Fred are growin' tremendous, mother says. An' Ted an' Fan, they're gettin' big-too; so most all of 'em's gittin' t' help what they can, out o' school times. Grace, she's goin' t' learn sten-o, graphy—they say ye c'n git big wages doin' that."

"GOSH, I'M GLAD TO SEE YOU!"

"Have you been home to see them yet?"

"Home?" he asked, with a tender emphasis on the word; "wish't I could, an' I guess I will, Thanksgivin'; but, ye see, these here young uns all got t' have clo'es an' go t' school, an' they cost a sight, they do."

After this, Pink was often in my mind, but I never saw nor heard anything of him for a year or two. Then one day, I drove out from Denver to a ranch some miles distant, to see Pink was there, in charge of a horse by the name of [illegible] turned as he heard us approach. He was the same old Pink, except that he wore a mustache (of the same color) and had developed in the way of incipient crow's feet at the corners of his eyes, and lines about his mouth.

"Well, how are all the Dyers?" I asked, after we had greeted each other.

"Oh, fine! Grace, she's married now—got married two months ago, to a operator. Min's got two kids now. Ha-ha-ha! Think o' me bein' a uncle! Th' boys? Why, they're big fellers now; Frank's learnin' th' operator's trade, with Gracie's husband, an' Fred, he's workin' in a newspaper shop, learnin' t' be a editor. Ted's still goin' t' school, but he's goin' t' quit next year an' learn machine-makin'—he allus was a great case f'r foolin' round machinery. Fan? Oh, she' little yit; she jes' stays t' home an' helps mother—mother says she's a big girl now, an' helps a lot."

"Are you working here?" I asked him.

"Yep; I'm top man now an' gittin' my fifty a month; but, say—don't ye think it'd pay me t' git out o' this an' go down in th' mines? This here's lazy work, I b'lieve. Mebbe ye c'd git me a job?"

I reflected a minute.

"I can get you a job," I said; "but it may not be a pleasant one. You'll have to work two months for a dollar a day, or until you can show yourself able to do miner's work; then you'll get three and a half. It isn't a good country to go into, though—it's new and pretty wild."

Pink was silent a few minutes and seemed to be figuring.

"I reckon," he finally said, slowly. "I c'n afford it, ef they's three an' a half a day on top o' the two months; but dy'e think I'll ketch on, O. K.?"

I assured him I thought he would, and he added: "All right—I'm y'r boy; I c'n go next week, when my month's up."

So Pink left the ranch and went to work in the hills, in a new mining district. Every once in awhile, after that, I used to hear from or of him. In one of the superintendent's first letters after Pink's arrival, he sent, by my request, a few lines about the new man.

"The new man you sent is a dandy—green, of course, but nobody's fool. He's eager to work, and flies at it like it was fun. Evenings now he takes a hammer and a set of drills, and goes over on the side-hill and drills rocks, to get his hand in. I wish there were a few more people like him."

"I'M GOIN' HOME."

It was not long until Pink was a miner, of course, and a good one, too; and as such he continued for the next couple of years, always in the same place.

One day the man who had been superintending the property dropped in on us at Denver; he was going to quit, as he had some property of his own to look after, he said. "And," he added, "of course I have nothing to say, but if you want a man to look after the property you'll hunt a long time before you find a match for that red-headed shift boss, Pink Dyer; he knows every foot of the mine."

We went down to take a look at the property; we arrived in the evening, as Pink was just coming off shift. He looked just as I expected he would, barring the deepening of the crows' feet and the lines about the mouth; they were too prominent for so young a man.

"Th' f lks?" said Pink. "Oh, they're all fine. Get a new house, mother an' th' kids have, an' puttin' on heaps o' dog. Min's got three young uns now, an' Grace's got a couple—don't it seem funny, though? Th' twins, they're gittin' on tip top, an' Ted, too. An Fan—why, I s'pose she's a young lady by this time. No, I hain't never been back; I'm goin' the twenty-fifth, sure, this time, an' no foolin'."

I did not tell him of his coming promotion; I wish I had, for he never knew. Late that night—it must have been one o'clock in the morning or thereabouts—the whistle blew at the hoisting works and we all hurried up to see what the trouble was, Pink, as temporary "boss," among the foremost.

One of the miners had been killed; he was a new man, and had been trying to make a good showing—that is, he had failed to clean the roof and walls (he was drifting) after each blast, and a loose chunk of rock had fallen and killed him.

Pink and another man went down to bring up the body, and presently, when we expected the signal, "Hoist!" there was an alarm from below, which continued for some seconds—then came the "hoist" signal.

A single man stepped from the cage; it was the man who had gone down with Pink to bring up the dead miner. In a few words he told us the cause of his first signal.

As they were bringing the dead man out of the shaft, there had been another fall of loose rock, and Pink had gone beneath it—he and the dead man.

It was not long before we had them out, but it was too late to save Pink. His back was broken, and we knew he could only live a few hours. We put him to bed, tenderly, and watched by him. Once in awhile he would come out of his unconscious state and talk queerly. At last, about daybreak, as I sat looking at him, his eyes opened suddenly.

"What day is this?" he asked.

"December 8th."

"Hm—little over two weeks; I don't b'lieve I'll git well enough by then. Le's see," he said; "le's see—eight, twenty-fifth—more'n two weeks—hm! Le's see—le's see—ten, seven, seventeen. I c'n git home. I'm goin' home—they's no use talkin'." He shut his eyes a little while, then added, forcefully:

"I am goin' home!"

"Yes, my boy, I know it," I said.—R. L. Ketchum, in San Francisco Argonaut.

Thrifty.

A strict spectator with a muscular arm and a hand like a smoked ham rushed in between the two young men who were pommeling, scratching and gouging each other, and separated them.

"If you don't stop this," he said, holding them at arm's length and shaking them till their teeth rattled, "I'll punish you together and break every bone in your worthless bodies! Now go!"

"That's all right," said the youth with the bruised eye and disfigured nose, picking up his hat and shaking his fist undismayed at the other young man. "I'll meet him in a football game some day where we can fight this out without interference!"—Chicago Tribune.

A Terrible Strain.

Son—If you think I can be a newspaper writer like you, what is the use of my taking up so many studies on subjects that newspapers never talk about?

Father (a dramatic critic)—They are simply for mental discipline, and the cultivation of the powers of memory, analysis, etc.

Son—What good will that do?

Father—If you do not acquire great powers of concentration, combined with wonderful penetration, backed by enormous retention, you will never be able to get the hang of the family history outlined by the servants in the first act of a new play.—Good News.

No Show for Him.

A pretty and altogether modest young Irish girl, evidently a nurse, stood patiently waiting her turn in a big drug store. At last one of the clerks, a rather lashing young fellow, disposing of his last customer, made his way to the young woman's side and asked, politely:

"Is anyone paying you attention, miss?"

The young woman blushed, hesitated a moment and answered coyly:

"No, sir; I am married!"—Christian Advocate.

Fine Clothes.

A Puzzling Problem.

Scratchley—I have an order for a portrait of Gen. Thomas. How in the world can I find one to draw from?

Daubley—Why, there's one on a five-dollar bill.

Scratchley—But how in the world can I get a five-dollar bill?—Harper's Bazar.

Reflections of Great Men.

Jones—I heard your new opera with great interest. Some passages of it reflect great credit.

Smithers—Oh, thank you. You are too kind—

Jones—Reflect great credit, as I was going to say, on Strauss, Milloecker and Offenbach.—Chicago News Record.

Out of Work.

Lawyer—Are you sure, sir, that the note was given for value received?

Plaintiff—Well, I should say so. Why, I've been trying to get that money for years, and I've been almost driven to the poorhouse in consequence. Can't you see well enough with the other to read with perfect ease this promissory note for sixty-four dollars and seventy-five cents which I hold in my hand. It was given me sixteen years ago by that lawyer there, and I can see the back of it well enough to be perfectly sure that there isn't an indorsement to the extent of a single cent. Yes, sir, I'm entirely willing to stand aside if that's all you want to know."—Chicago Tribune.

Another Swindle.

Farmer Hayseed—No, I don't want any more labor savin' machines. I've tried enough of 'em. Look in there. That's a type-writin' machine my wife spent all her egg money to get for me, 'cause I ain't very handy with th' pen. Just look at th' tarnal swindle.

Farmer Hayseed—Matter? Why you can't even write y'r name with the tarnal thing unless you know how to play a church organ.—N. Y. Weekly.

Valuables.

Witherby—That's a nice little safe you have for your home, old man. I suppose that is for your wife's use?

Plankington—Not much. She hasn't even the combination.

Witherby—You must keep something very valuable in it, not even to let your wife know the combination of it.

Plankington—You bet I do. I keep all my collar-buttons and shoestrings in that safe.—Judge.

Making Sure of His Pay.

Liveryman—I'm afraid, sir, I must ask you to pay in advance for the hire of the horse.

Amateur Rider—What's that for? Are you afraid that I shall come back without the horse?

Liveryman—Oh, no, sir! But the horse might come back without you.—Boston Globe.

Big Enough for Him.

Very Stout Old Lady (watching the lions feed)—'Pears to me, mister, that ain't a very big piece o' meat for sech an animal.

Attendant (with the greatest show of politeness)—I s'pose it does seem like a small piece of meat to you, ma'am, but it's big enough for the lion.

Oh, Those Razors Pull.

Barber (impatiently)—Well, if you can't calm yourself I can't shave you, for I am just about as nervous as I can be.

Customer—What's the matter?

Barber—Why, I've got to be shaved by one of my men myself this afternoon.—Des Moines Argonaut.

Royal Baking Powder.

THE GOVERNMENT TESTS ESTABLISHES ITS ABSOLUTE SUPERIORITY.

(Data from the latest Official U. S. Government Report on Baking Powders, Department of Agriculture, Bulletin 13, page 599.)

Royal is placed first of the cream of tartar powders, actual strength, 160.6 cubic inches of leavening gas per ounce of powder.

Every other powder tested exhibited a much lower strength than the Royal, the average being 33 per cent. less.

Every other powder likewise showed the presence of alum or sulphuric acid.

The claim that this report shows any other powder of superior strength or purity has been denounced as a falsehood by the Government officers who made the tests.

Avoid all baking powders sold with a gift or prize, or at a lower price than the Royal, as they invariably contain alum, lime or sulphuric acid, and render the food unwholesome.

VOLAPUK UP TO DATE.

The New Language Making Solid Progress in Europe.

Volapuk, the new tongue which was to bind all articulate creation together in the bond of a common language, has been but little heard of for some time past. In Belgium, however, the Volapukists are showing signs of life. A conference of "Volapukists," as they are called, is being held at Brussels and according to all accounts much enthusiasm is being displayed for Pastor Schleyer and his system. The volapukists profess to be indifferent to the ridicule with which they have been assailed. Their pet notion is destined to triumph and they can afford to wait. If the present generation does not reap the full benefit of their labors succeeding generations will do so. Such has been the tenor of their discourses. But in the meantime, if their figures are to be trusted, they have made solid progress. It is only twelve years since volapuk was first promulgated to a world which is slow to adopt new ideas, and already by its means 3,000,000 of people—English, French, German, Russian, Italian and Belgian—are able to converse with each other on that common ground. Not only is this so, but we are told that thirty newspapers altogether are published in volapuk in different parts of the world, that courses of lectures on the new language are held at the universities of Munich and Turin, and that the Russian press censors are bound to be acquainted with it to qualify themselves for their posts.—London Daily News.

--Hi Dyer had a crew of men fill his new ice house with ice, this week. The ice is splendid.

--Len Terry is authority for saying that Johnny Borrill will conduct, at the next sociable held in town, a game of "go-bang."

--A Bubble sociable at the City Hall, on Tuesday evening, Jan. 24. Prizes will be given to winners. Come everybody and see the novelty.

--Read on the inside of this paper of the death of Rutherford B. Hayes; the burial of Benjamin F. Butler. Some of the bills presented to the legislature and various other things.

—James Danforth has bought out Ennis N. Brandon's interest in the livery stable and again faces the blighting blasts with passengers. Ennis will engage in something else we are told.

—Messrs. Drew, of Minneapolis have been shipping some dressed hogs from this place. It gives our depot quite a citified appearance to have pork, flour, poultry and other products of our county piled up around it.

—Joseph L. Matter is putting in his winter hours in a profitable manner by hauling manure from town alleys to the Inwie farm, which he has rented. Jo expects to reap his reward in an increased yield of golden grain next harvest. It pays to manuer your farm where so good a chance exists.

—Messrs. Podas and Wells took up quarters at the Danforth House very early Thursday morning, with the books for collecting taxes. A good many people had trouble finding them. A report was started that they would not be here for a day or two yet. Had their trip been as well advertised as formerly this might not have occurred.

—The Literary Society in District, No. 48, is said to be in a flourishing condition, the attendance large, exercises interesting and instructive. A programme appears each week in our columns. Literary Programs in the neighborhood or in the county will be published if sent to us in season, free. We are always pleased to assist as best we can in enterprises of this kind.

—The Pansy Souvenir offered our subscribers has not been received by some. We are in receipt of a card which claims the publishers have received a large number of clippings of newspapers without the address being given where they should be sent. If you wish to get this popular picture. Address. W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 15 East, 14th-st., New Y. Put in six cents in postage stamps, and give your address plainly, and mention the GAZETTE.

—On Sunday morning as a young man working for Charles Eppel, happened to go up to his room, in Charley's new brick residence, he discovered that the chimney was on fire and the tin cover to the stove pipe hole in the chimney had been blown out and the fire had been thrown onto the carpet and onto some quilts on the bed damaging them quite a little. The fire was extinguished without further damage. Rather a narrow escape as it is nearly a mile from the fire engine house.

—The Minneapolis Evening Tribune of January 14, published the full text of the Text Book Bill introduced into the legislature by Hon. P. G. Winston. In commenting it says:

Mr. Winston's bill has been drawn with great care, and seems to be just what is wanted. It is modeled largely after the Nebraska law. Mr. Winston said today that before drafting it he corresponded with educationalists all over the country in regard to the workings of such a law, and found that in the large cities it effected a saving of from 30 to 40 per cent in the cost of books.

Our board claims there is a combine, a trust, and they can get but 10 or at most 16⅔ off. Who is this combine? Who is in this trust? If Mayor Winston finds other people saving from 20 to 40 per cent, why can't our board do as well? If they can't, what do we want them to buy the books for?

—A chance to sell stave bolts read notice in another place.

—Delano now has two tailor shops. Read their advertisements.

—We are obliged to omit a communication from Henry E. Crandall, this week.

—The Eagle's recent ravings reminds one of the fearful ride of one "Tam O'Shanter."

—Persons interested in the formation of a Literary society are requested to meet at Dr. Catlin's office, on Saturday, Jan. 21, at 7 p. m.

—A business meeting of the officers and members of the M. E. church is called for next Thursday evening at the church. Let all be present.

--The Eagle seems to have a great antipathy to democrats. She accuses about everyone she don't happen to agree with with being a democrat.

--Read and preserve the notice of teachers' meetings to be held. The first one, on Saturday, Jan. 28, at Delano. Everybody interested in educational affairs requested to be present.

—J. C. Hitz requests us to say that he will retain his Insurance business in Delano, the same being in charge of Henry Bock, of Delano, in his absence. All business will be promptly looked after.

—If you wish to know where to trade to advantage, or where to have work well done, call on our advertisers and we think you will be pleased. Tell them you read about them in the GAZETTE and see how pleased they will look.

—At the regular meeting of the Delano Board of Education held at the council rooms on Saturday evening last the board allowed several bills. Discussed the trouble with the furnaces; the east end of the building not being warm enough. Decided to buy wood sawed in two as the furnace grate is only 2 ft. 8 inches long. Bids are to be received for 40 cords, green maple, 30 cords, green oak, 30 cords, soft wood, popple or basswood, green, all 2 feet long, and 10 cords, dry oak, 4 feet long, to be delivered by March 1 and 15.

Prof. Dewey asked the board to furnish 15 books on Botany, this the board would not do, but I. Gutzwiller, Jr., offered to get the books and allow the scholars to buy them. I Gutzwiller, Jr., reported that he had investigated the mater of free text books and decided that if the district kept up the free text book system it would be necessary to levy ½ mill more school tax. And then they would have to be careful of the books. Dr. Catlin was present and stated that A. W. Wittman had bills showing that he could buy books from 15 to 25 per cent below list price and asking that the board do as well. I. Gutzwiller, Jr., thought from 10 to 16⅔ was the best they could do.

Prof. Dewey stated to the board that he had secured the state questions for examination, and hoped to raise the grade of our school to that of a high school in the near future.

The Eagle forgot to change her number and date this week. It was issued on time all right and we presume that will not materially interfere with her legal adds. She seems to have a touch of Rip Van Winkle in her make up.

Rev. Jack Parmeter, formerly of North Rockford, now paster at Oak Harbor, Wash., writes that he is doing well. That he never missed preaching until New Year's day, on which occasion a fine boy weighing 8 lbs. made his arrival at their house.

Republicans and Democrats alike do not approve of the course of one of the C. K. Davis Electorial college sent from our county who is said to give as an excuse for his absence from the Republican caucus that he had to go to Minneapolis for medical aid for his colleague. Where was he when the first ballot was taken? Gone after medicine for himself?

Senator A. Y. Eaton, of Wright county, voted for W. R. Merriam as most people thought he would. Our representatives cast their votes for Davis though everybody seemed very suspecious of Holler, and a great many hard things was said about him as he failed to show up until the joint ballot when his vote is said to have saved the day, though the result would have been the same had he remained away.

CORRESPONDENCE

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Plenty of cold weather and good sleighing. The snow is not deep but enough for comfort.

To-day our state legislature vote for United States Senator, who will it be Davis or the man that has got the money?

Some of the Maple Plain church members have moved their membership to Armstrong. There seems to be quite a change in church matters throughout the country, must have caught the contagion from the changing of the government administration no doubt this is a good time to reform. The Methodists, at Armstrong, seem to be taking the field.

R. M. Mills is a delegate to Good Read's convention at St. Paul, 25 and 26 present month. The subject of good roads is being agitated not only in this state but in almost every state in the union, let the good work go on. We may be benefited by it. Would it not be a good thing for every town to hold a Farmers' Institute and talk up practical farming a little, this we see is being done in different parts of the state.

G. N. Elliott expects to have his saw mill running in a few days.

The price of wheat will not make farmers rich this year. Next fall it will be cordwood and pork.

ROCKFORD RECORDS.

Miss Jessie Florida and Mrs. W. H. Hatch after spending a couple of weeks with their mother, returned to Chicago, Monday. Miss Carrie Florida accompanied them to Minneapolis.

O. C. Roberts took in the Flour city Monday.

Eugene Edgar had a runaway last week. The sleigh tipped over and the horse got away smashing things up considerable.

The land owners of Greenwood township met at lake Sarah, Monday to consider advisability and offer objections if they had any to putting a road in from Mr. Jenkin's place to lake Sarah. They had a lively discussion sides being about even for and against. The road is to be laid out.

There will be no dance in the G. A. R. hall, Friday night, the 20th as intended.

There was a very pleasant suprise party given Mr. and Mrs. Fred Darrow at their home, Friday evening. A large number of the young people gathered there and spent the evening with dancing and games. Every one enjoyed themselves and Mr. and Mrs. Darrow as usual highly entertained their guests. The party broke up a short time before day light.

Mr. Andrew S. Abbott is visiting relatives in this vicinity.

F. H. Wooden spent Sunday in Buffalo (?)

Homer Sook had two runaways in Rockford the past week.

The Good Templars will hold public installation and render a little entertainment, the first Tuesday in Feb. Every one invited.

Tariff Pictures.

During the first eleven months of 1891 the United States sold to the Latin-American countries agricultural implements valued at $668,652

In the corresponding period of 1892 the value of the implements sent to the same countries had grown to $1,863,286

This is how reciprocity is working.

Going to raise their own bread stuffs and others eatables, are they? And buy their machinery of our rich manufacturers at less rates than we can ourselves? How will this help Minnesota farmers? If they would raise what their own countries are best adopted for and send it to us as cheaply as possible in exchange for our country's goods and products, would not they and we be better off than for them to try to raise our natural products while we go without theirs? We can't raise coffee on our farms but gladly would we exchange wheat which we can raise for that and other products of South America.

ODE TO HOLLER.

Oh Holler, thou who noble art,
Maybe now you think you're smart,
Wined and dined for doing it,
Saving Davis from a fit.
Noble name the name of Holler,
Spose you think it's quite a lollar
Any relation to a yell?
Little difference in the spell—
How'd you like to have it "shout?"
Why'd you leave them so in doubt?
What's the matter with a "cry"
My but you did pipe your eye,
How'd it seem to make it scream?
Anti men think you are mean,
When'll you change it into screech?
Pulling Davis from the breech;
There's a pretty word called holler,
Holler an't so far from holler,
A big holler makes a roar,
Will your head go through a door?
'Twould be nice to spell it shriek,
You'll be in it for a week,
Shriek will get to be a noise
When o' nights you're with the boys,
Noise will soon swell into din
By the time that spring sets in
Saved the party did you, Holler,
As you would a hot tomaler,
Cast the vote that saved the day,
Think his hair is full of hay?
Not this one, some other Holler,
This one comes from Montercellor.

—Read the advertisement of Andrew Sandberg in another column.

—Paul Plotnik is becoming one of Delano's heaviest wood shippers.

--The 4th Monday of January will be the cemetery meeting, 4 p. m. at Erwig's shop.

--Hi Dyer had a crew of men fill his new ice house with ice, this week. The ice is splendid.

--Len Terry is authority for saying that Johnny Borrill will conduct, at the next sociable held in town, a game of "go-bang."

—A Bubble sociable at the City Hall, on Tuesday evening, Jan. 24. Prizes will be given to winners. Come everybody and see the novelty.

--Read on the inside of this paper of the death of Rutherford B. Hayes; the burial of Benjamin F. Butler. Some of the bills presented to the legislature and various other things.

—James Danforth has bought out Ennis N. Brandon's interest in the livery stable and again faces the blighting blasts with passengers. Ennis will engage in something else we are told.

—Messrs. Drew, of Minneapolis have been shipping some dressed hogs from this place. It gives our depot quite a citified appearance to have pork, flour, poultry and other products of our county piled up around it.

—Joseph L. Matter is putting in his winter hours in a profitable manner by hauling manure from town alleys to the Inwie farm, which he has rented. Jo expects to reap his reward in an increased yield of golden grain next harvest. It pays to manuer your farm where so good a chance exists.

—Messrs. Podas and Wells took up quarters at the Danforth House very early Thursday morning, with the books for collecting taxes. A good many people had trouble finding them. A report was started that they would not be here for a day or two yet. Had their trip been as well advertised as formerly this might not have occurred.

—The Literary Society in District, No. 48, is said to be in a flourishing condition, the attendance large, exercises interesting and instructive. A programme appears each week in our columns. Literary Programs in the neighborhood or in the county will be published if sent to us in season, free. We are always pleased to assist as best we can in enterprises of this kind.

—The Pansy Souvenir offered our subscribers has not been received by some. We are in receipt of a card which claims the publishers have received a large number of clippings of newspapers without the address being given where they should be sent. If you wish to get this popular picture. Address. W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 15 East, 14th-st., New Y. Put in six cents in postage stamps, and give your address plainly, and mention the GAZETTE.

—On Sunday morning as a young man working for Charles Eppel, happened to go up to his room, in Charley's new brick residence, he discovered that the chimney was on fire and the tin cover to the stove pipe hole in the chimney had been blown out and the fire had been thrown onto the carpet and onto some quilts on the bed damaging them quite a little. The fire was extinguished without further damage. Rather a narrow escape as it is nearly a mile from the fire engine house.

—The Minneapolis Evening Tribune of January 14, published the full text of the Text Book Bill introduced into the legislature by Hon. P. G. Winston. In commenting it says:

Mr. Winston's bill has been drawn with great care, and seems to be just what is wanted. It is modeled largely after the Nebraska law. Mr. Winston said today that before drafting it he corresponded with educationalists all over the country in regard to the workings of such a law, and found that in the large cities it effected a saving of from 20 to 40 per cent in the cost of books.

Our board claims there is a combine, a trust, and they can get but 10 or at most 16⅔ off. Who is this combine? Who is in this trust? If Mayor Winston finds other people saving from 20 to 40 per cent, why can't our board do as well? If they can't, what do we want them to buy the books for?

—A chance to sell stave bolts read notice in another place.

--Delano now has two tailor shops. Read their advertisements.

—We are obliged to omit a communication from Henry E. Crandall, this week.

—The Eagle's recent ravings reminds one of the fearful ride of one "Tam O'Shanter."

—Persons interested in the formation of a Literary society are requested to meet at Dr. Catlin's office, on Saturday, Jan. 21, at 7 p. m.

—A business meeting of the officers and members of the M. E. church is called for next Thursday evening at the church. Let all be present.

—The Eagle seems to have a great antipathy to democrats. She accuses about everyone she don't happen to agree with with being a democrat.

—Read and preserve the notice of teachers' meetings to be held. The first one, on Saturday, Jan. 28, at Delano. Everybody interested in educational affairs requested to be present.

—J. C. Hitz requests us to say that he will retain his Insurance business in Delano, the same being in charge of Henry Bock, of Delano, in his absence. All business will be promptly looked after.

—If you wish to know where to trade to advantage, or where to have work well done, call on our advertisers and we think you will be pleased. Tell them you read about them in the GAZETTE and see how pleased they will look.

—At the regular meeting of the Delano Board of Education held at the council rooms on Saturday evening last the board allowed several bills. Discussed the trouble with the furnaces; the east end of the building not being warm enough. Decided to buy wood sawed in two as the furnace grate is only 2 ft. 8 inches long. Bids are to be received for 40 cords, green maple, 30 cords, green oak, 30 cords, soft wood, popple or basswood, green, all 2 feet long, and 10 cords, dry oak, 4 feet long, to be delivered by March 1 and 15.

Prof. Dewey asked the board to furnish 15 books on Botany, this the board would not do, but I. Gutzwiller, Jr., offered to get the books and allow the scholars to buy them. I Gutzwiller, Jr., reported that he had investigated the mater of free text books and decided that if the district kept up the free text book system it would be necessary to levy ½ mill more school tax. And then they would have to be careful of the books. Dr. Catlin was present and stated that A. W. Wittman had bills showing that he could buy books from 15 to 25 per cent below list price and asking that the board do as well. I. Gutzwiller, Jr., thought from 10 to 16⅔ was the best they could do.

Prof. Dewey stated to the board that he had secured the state questions for examination, and hoped to raise the grade of our school to that of a high school in the near future.

The Eagle forgot to change her number and date this week. It was issued on time all right and we presume that will not materially interfere with her legal adds. She seems to have a touch of Rip Van Winkle in her make up.

Rev. Jack Parmeter, formerly of North Rockford, now paster at Oak Harbor, Wash., writes that he is doing well. That he never missed preaching until New Year's day, on which occasion a fine boy weighing 8 lbs. made his arrival at their house.

Republicans and Democrats alike do not approve of the course of one of the C. K. Davis Electorial college sent from our county who is said to give as an excuse for his absence from the Republican caucus that he had to go to Minneapolis for medical aid for his colleague. Where was he when the first ballot was taken? Gone after medicine for himself?

Senator A. Y. Eaton, of Wright county, voted for W. R. Merriam as most people thought he would. Our representatives cast their votes for Davis though everybody seemed very suspecious of Holler, and a great many hard things was said about him as he failed to show up until the joint ballot when his vote is said to have saved the day, though the result would have been the same had he remained away.

CORRESPONDENCE

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Plenty of cold weather and good sleighing. The snow is not deep but enough for comfort.

To-day our state legislature vote for United States Senator, who will it be Davis or the man that has got the money?

Some of the Maple Plain church members have moved their membership to Armstrong. There seems to be quite a change in church matters throughout the country, must have caught the contagion from the changing of the government administration no doubt this is a good time to reform. The Methodists, at Armstrong, seem to be taking the field.

R. M. Mills is a delegate to Good Read's convention at St. Paul, 25 and 26 present month. The subject of good roads is being agitated not only in this state but in almost every state in the union, let the good work go on. We may be benefited by it. Would it not be a good thing for every town to hold a Farmers' Institute and talk up practical farming a little, this we see is being done in different parts of the state.

G. N. Elliott expects to have his saw mill running in a few days.

The price of wheat will not make farmers rich this year. Next fall it will be cordwood and pork.

ROCKFORD RECORDS.

Miss Jessie Florida and Mrs. W. H. Hatch after spending a couple of weeks with their mother, returned to Chicago, Monday. Miss Carrie Florida accompanied them to Minneapolis.

O. C. Roberts took in the Flour city Monday.

Eugene Edgar had a runaway last week. The sleigh tipped over and the horse got away smashing things up considerable.

The land owners of Greenwood township met at lake Sarah, Monday to consider advisability and offer objections if they had any to putting a road in from Mr. Jenkin's place to lake Sarah. They had a lively discussion sides being about even for and against. The road is to be laid out.

There will be no dance in the G. A. R. hall, Friday night, the 20th as intended.

There was a very pleasant suprise party given Mr. and Mrs. Fred Darrow at their home, Friday evening. A large number of the young people gathered there and spent the evening with dancing and games. Every one enjoyed themselves and Mr. and Mrs. Darrow as usual highly entertained their guests. The party broke up a short time before day light.

Mr. Andrew S. Abbott is visiting relatives in this vicinity.

F. H. Wooden spent Sunday in Buffalo (?)

Homer Sook had two runaways in Rockford the past week.

The Good Templars will hold public installation and render a little entertainment, the first Tuesday in Feb. Every one invited.

Tariff Pictures.

During the first eleven months of 1891 the United States sold to the Latin-American countries agricultural implements valued at $668,652

In the corresponding period of 1892 the value of the implements sent to the same countries had grown to $1,863,286

This is how reciprocity is working.

Going to raise their own bread stuffs and others eatables, are they? And buy their machinery of our rich manufacturers at less rates than we can ourselves? How will this help Minnesota farmers? If they would raise wheat their own countries are best adopted for and send it to us as cheaply as possible in exchange for our country's goods and products, would not they and we be better off than for them to try to raise our natural products while we go without theirs? We can't raise coffee on our farms but gladly would we exchange wheat which we can raise for that and other products of South America.

ODE TO HOLLER.

Oh Holler, thou who noble art,
Maybe now you think you're smart,
Wined and dined for doing it,
Saving Davis from a fit,
Noble name the name of Holler,
Spose you think it's quite a lollar
Any relation to a yell?
Little difference in the spell—
How'd you like to have it "shout?"
Why'd you leave them so in doubt?
What's the matter with a "cry"
My but you did pipe your eye,
How'd it seem to make it scream?
Anti men think you are mean,
When'll you change it into screech?
Pulling Davis from the breech;
There's a pretty word called holler,
Holler an't so far from holler,
A big holler makes a roar,
Will your head go through a door?
'Twould be nice to spell it shriek,
You'll be in it for a week,
Shriek will get to be a noise
When o' nights you're with the boys,
Noise will soon swell into din
By the time that spring sets in
Saved the party did you, Holler,
As you would a hot tomaler,
Cast the vote that saved the day,
Think his hair is full of hay?
Not this one, some other Holler,
This one comes from Montercellor.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 13 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

A PLEA FOR THE CHRISTIAN'S HORSE.

(Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE.)

How many good christians while singing and praying
That God's richest blessings may come and abide
On saint, and on sinner, without any distinction
Has any pity for his horse unsheltered outside?

How many while in their warm pleasant churches are sitting Secure from the cold wind's chilling tide
Ever think how their poor horses are shivering and shaking
As they're tied to the post, unsheltered outside?

The good pious brothers with hearts all emotion
Comfortably wraped in their robes often ride,
To their own place of worship intent on devotion,
And there hitch their poor horse, unsheltered, outside?

Tied fast to the post, often all perspiration,
While the wind pierces through their hair to the hide,
With their blankets blown off several hours in duration,
Compelled to quietly stand there, unsheltered outside.

Now there's more than one kind of religion I'm thinking,
One is to be thoughtful protect and provide,
For the poor faithful creatures looking to us for protection,
And provide them a shelter from the cold wind outside.

Haven't time, can't afford, no doubt you are saying,
But stop, are you sure of it? take a thought as you ride,
Would not what it costs for the tobacco you are using,
In one year build a shelter for your poor horse outside?

Were our horses not dumb and had powers of reasoning
Like their thoughtless masters (I don't wish to deride)
No doubt on a cold winter's night we'd hear them imploring
For a few boards to shelter them while standing outside.

Don't think I'm irreverent or lacking devotion
Far from it: pure religion is my joy and my pride,
But I'm often made sad and my heart aches with compassion,
When I see the poor horses shivering unsheltered, outside.

"A merciful man will be merciful to his beast" is the good books pleading,
Then let us take head and by it's precepts abide,
And be merciful to all God's creatures and ever providing
A comfortable shelter, while standing outside.

Now good christian brother have pity and compassion,
And by your church erect ther a shed and let it abide,
Then as you worship you'll have God's approbation,
And your horse will be comfortable not out but inside.

SIDUS ACHATES.

D. L. KIEHLE has been re-appointed State Superintendent of Public schools.

L. Q. C. LAMAR, one of the Justices of the United States Supreme court, died at Macon, Georgia, on Monday, Jan. 23.

ROGER Q. MILLS has been re-elected Senator from Texas by the overwhelming vote of 143; to Nugent 9; Corey, 1

MR. AND MRS. P. A. KROSHUS, of the Starbuck Journal, lost their oldest boy, aged 9 years, by spinal memigitis, caused by being run over by a hand sled the day before, while sliding down hill. They have our warmest sympathies in their affliction.

SENATOR DONNELLY is one ahead. The other day Senator Hompe moved for a clerk for the Grain and Warehouse committee with the expectation of having his friend, Frank Hoskins, of Henning, appointed. When the vote had been taken Senator Hompe thought to clinch matters by calling for ayes and nays. His wiley opponent offered to be clerk himself, and the senators changed their votes and very quickly made the Sage clerk of the Grain and Ware-house committee, without extra pay saving the state about $600.

THE Republican Senators and legislators who had the independence to vote as their consciences told them in perference to obeying the commands of scheming politicans, and howling "organs" showed the evils of "instructing" delegates. Some of these were uninstructed.

PLILLIP BROOKS, Bishop of the Episcopal church in Massachusetts, and an able man, died suddenly on the 23d inst., of Diphtheria, at his home in Boston. The funeral was public, the body encased in an hermetically sealed coffin to prevent the spread of the cautagious disease.

IT is just wonderful what hard things the Republican papers in Wright, Sherburne, Anoka, Nicollet, Hennepin and a few other counties can say about the senators and representatives who did not support C. K. Davis. Why don't they devote a part of their space to the patriarchs and bell-wethers of the flock who crowded the floor of the House during the joint session and loaned their "influence?"

SOME of the republican papers are claiming that the people re-elected C. K. Davis to the U. S. Senate. When one reads the reports and finds the names of many prominent republicans who were active in the joint session, and whose names do not appear on the list of members of either House he is led to believe their might be a few grains of truth in the assertion. If the people are to elect the U. S. senator let the whole people, and not the favored few, have a chance to vote.

IF our law makers keep on, all some people will have to do, will be to lie in bed, and be fed and cared for like so many pigs, in their pens, with never a care about their future nor even the present. Senator Mott has already introduced a bill into the Senate placing a little more tax on property and having the State pay Insurance in case of any damage. Senator Hompe wants a State Grain House, at Duluth where the State will handle the farmer's grain for him. Mayor Winston has a bill for free text books in schools. Add free telegraphs, free railroads and a few more things and the average citizen will need no money of his own. But can ride free and stop at free hotels and get his cigars and liquors free and wear free clothes and be a free gentleman at the expense of the State or the country. This may be all very nice for some folks but somebody will have to pay for it.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 20, 1893

Republican officials, particularly those who have been in office, in the departments, for eight years or more, are in a state of mind. They don't like recent indications of a coming change in the Civil Service law. Civil Service Commissioner Roosevelt, in his anxiety in behalf of the republican office-holders, even took the trouble to go over to New York for the purpose of sounding President-elect Cleveland on the subject. The immediate causes of this panicky feeling on the part of those who felt their positions on Uncle Sam's pay roll to be safe were two bills introduced in the House: one, by Representative Martin, of Indiana, providing that from and after the first of next July, appointments in the Government services should be for a term of four years and that each official so appointed should be eligible for one reappointment, but no more; that all officials—here comes the part that has upset the nerves of those who have been feeding at the public trough so long that they thought it belonged to them—who have been in government employ eight years or longer shall be ineligible to re-appointment, and the other providing for a suspension of the Civil Service law, so far as it relates to appointments and removals, for a period of one year from the beginning of each Presidential term. Representative De Armond, of Missouri, the author of the last-named bill, says in a preamble thereto that no administration can fully and satisfactorily carry its policies into execution if a large portion of the subordinate officers are hostile to such policies.

The largest appropriation bill—the Sundry Civil—has been completed. It is $15,000,000 less than the estimates submitted to the House. The Diplomatic and Consular bill is also complete. It carries $200,000 less than the estimates. The democratic watchword—economy—is being lived up to as much as possible.

Senator Sherman's ability to look out for number one has made him a very rich man, and not a small part of his wealth was made out of Washington real estate. Several years ago he bought on speculation a large piece of unimproved ground on the outskirts of the city, and recently a water-main was laid along the front of that property and a bill amounting to about $700 for the special tax provided by law was sent to Senator Sherman. Instead of paying this bill as a private citizen without an official "pull" would have done, he appealed to the local officials to remit the tax, on the ground that the land was unimproved and would remain so, as it was his intention when he purchased it, and still is his intention, to sell it to the government to be used as a park. If the Senator proposed giving this ground to the government there might be some justice in his not paying this water-main tax, but as he expects to sell it (at a big profit, presumably) he should be made to pay all the legal taxes on it, just as the most obscure individual would have to do.

The making of the joint resolution providing for the election of the U. S Senators by direct vote of the people a party question by the republicans of the House, when it was taken up and passed under a suspension of the rules, indicates that the resolution may be defeated in the Senate by the same tactics. There are, however, a number of republican Senators who, having publicly committed themselves in favor of the proposition, will find it awkward to vote against it.

More money for pensions. In addition to the $10,508,621, asked for on account of a deficiency in the appropriations for the current fiscal year, $2,335,816 was this week asked for by Secretary Noble to meet a further deficiency which has come to light since the estimate was made.

The public buildings in Washington are all closed today on account of the funeral of Ex-President Hayes, and several members of the cabinet and a detail of officers of the army and navy are at the funeral as representatives of the administration. Personally Mr. Hayes was generally liked by democrats who knew him, but those who did not enjoy that pleasure always, perhaps unconsciously, associated him in their minds with the methods by which he became President, methods never to be duplicated and never to be forgotten, which prevented their fully appreciating the really good traits which he possessed. Although he was the chief beneficiary of a plot which will always be a blot upon American history, let it be remembered to his credit that he neither originated it nor took any part in carrying it out.

Delegate Cains has not been idle during this session. He has secured a unanimous report in favor of his bill for the administration of Utah as a State, from the House committee on Territories.

That Treasury report, which it was promised the House Ways and Means committee would be ready a week ago has not yet been made. The sickness of the official who was superintending its preparation is given as an excuse for the delay.

CORRESPONDENCE

WAVERLY.

Mr. Wm. Quinn and Miss Mary Davis, of Franklin, were united in holy wedlock by Father Cawley at the Catholic church, Watertown, Tuesday morning. A reception was held at the residence of Mr. Quinn, in this village at which the immediate friends of the contracting parties participated. Mr. an Mrs. Quinn left on the afternoon train for a wedding tour and will return next week.

Miss Mabel Fitzgerald, of Moorhead, is visiting her friend, Miss Florence Quinn.

Mr. and Mrs. John O'Leary, of Buffalo, visited with friends here, Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. John McNeely, of Woodland, celebrated the tenth anniversary of their marriage, Tuesday. There was a large number of their friends present, and the event will long be remembered as a grand social affair.

Mr. J. B. Quinn, Jr., left Monday to attend the lumberman's excursion to Chicago.

Quite a number of young ladies and gentlemen attended the surprise party, at Mr. Moore's, near Montrose, last Fri a evening.

Mr. Thomas Pereault gave a party to his numerous friends Tuesday.

MAPLE PLAIN MUSINGS.

Mrs. Fannie Drysdale and daughter, Maud, left, last Monday, for Dayton, Washington, where Mr. Drysdale has resided for some time. They go to make a permanent home in that far-off region, and there is a great deal of genuine sorrow here at their departure from among us. We may never see them again in this world, but none who ever knew them will ever forget them or cease to wish them well. When travelers come back from that far-off land our first inquiry shall be for the welfare of the family of Mr. Drysdale. May kind Providence, good angels, and noble men and women ever smile about their pathways and make their lives as blessed and happy as they ought to be.

Rev. Wright, of Minneapolis, preached in the Maple Plain Presbyterian church, last Sunday afternoon and evening.

Prof. John Corcoran, of Corcoran, was the guest of William Kennedy, our village school-teacher, at the Star hotel, last Saturday.

Mr. James A. Henderson was the recipient last week of a beautiful $6.25 bible, presented to him by the family of Mr. McIntire, with whom he has been living for the past three weeks. Mr. Henderson, since he came to the neighborhood, one month ago, has been presented with nine dollars in money and a $7.00 pair of pants.

By looking over last week's Eagle I notice that the editor, of that paper, calls the BUFFALO GAZETTE a silly paper. The Mr. Editor ought to know that part of the paper is made up by correspondents, even by men who writes for the Eagle also, and by my judgment it is a rather silly expression for an editor to use, and will not count much toward building up a good reputation for his paper. I, for my part give the Mr. Editor my compliments for his kind expression.

J. HARDT.

ROCKFORD RECORDS.

We are well supplied with the beautiful this winter and still it comes.

Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Moore, Dr. and Mrs. O. R. Fassett and Miss Florida drove over to Delano, Friday.

The Graduating class of the Rockford school with their teacher, Mrs. Beede, spent last Friday evening with Sup't. of schools, Mr. F. H. Lindsley at Delano. All report a pleasant time and a fine sleigh ride.

Two of our citizens who handle medics to some extent, had a little altercation which resulted in a rough and tumble fight, Monday night, one of them is at present nursing a bitten thumb.

D. R. Farnham left Wednesday morning to attend the Good Roads Convention in St. Paul as delegate from this vicinity of Wright Co. There seems to be much interest in this convention and Mr. Farnham is an enthusiastic advocate of good roads.

G. A. Ruckoldt visited Minneapolis, one day, this week.

The Delano and Rockford schools will cross bats in a spelling contest next Friday evening, Jan. 27th, at the G. A. R. hall. It will probably be interesting and close as there are good spellers in either school.

We are informed that through some discrepancy in the second petition for the road from Mr. Jenkins' to Lake Sarah it was thrown out and the road will not be laid until they secure another petition and have another meeting and perhaps not then. They failed to file the petition with the clerk of Greenwood township, twenty days before the meeting, to take action upon it was called, but filed it the same day—a number of those in opposition declare the township treasury is empty now and they cannot afford it.

During the past two weeks there has been a number of parties in this vicinity looking over our real estate. One man from Wisconsin, spent a day here with us looking for land for a colony of people who wish to move out into the Minnesota woods. He was very favorably impressed with the country and we may see him back soon.

Mr. Jackson lectured at Rockford, Monday morning.

More Politics.

Under the reign of Augustus Caesar the whole world was first taxed (but do not expect this continent was counted in then) and all the people went up to Jerusalem to pay tribute. And it has been kept up ever since down to this 19th century. But we do not suppose in those days they had government bonds for a banking basis or in other words their banking system was not founded on the debt of the nation. In last fall's campaign the Republican party tried to make it appear that the Democratic party was a free trade party, and, on these grounds hoped to win the election, but the medicine they had prepared for the people with all its sugar coating did not have the desired effect and they were ruled out. Now the democratic party believe in a tariff for revenue, but not a protective tariff for every little squirt of an industry that may spring up, at some cross roads. It seems during the last thirty years our law-makers have been somewhat inconsiderate in their deliberations, and have legislated more in favor of the classes than for the masses, but they say a drop of water will purify itself in running over three pebbles, and so we may yet have hope of a reformation, in some form or other. Neither do we have to go far away from home to find unjust taxation. Here in Hennepin county only two or three years ago it was conceived in the minds of many Minneapolis men to build a house, a court of Sanhedrem where the people of this county might have a repectable place to go and pay their taxes. And they so planned that the latter house far exceed the former in size and grandeur. A tax payer of Hennepin county on going down 4th St. in Minneapolis to about 8th Ave., South, will strike the old court house there by enquiring of the incumbent, the county treasurer, how much you are indebted to him or rather Hennepin county, for new court house expenses, and other sundries will be accommodated, by said gentlemen. After you have paid your taxes and taken a receipt, walk back to 4th St. until you come to about 4th Ave., South, and there you will find a huge mass of masonry, consisting of stone and brick: this is the new court house for Hennepin county and a hole where will be squandered about four million of money, before it is complete. About two million have been spent already and only about half done. "Consistency though art a jewel" so it is useless for me further to attempt an explanation of this monstrous leviathan shoved upon the tax-payers of Hennepin county. No doubt it will be a living monument for generations yet to come. And these stones and brick may not crumble until Gabriel blows his last trump. But a one million dollar court house would have answered Hennpin county just as well as a four million one, and even better. Would not cost so much to run it and keep it in repair. But perhaps I have got off my text a little in speaking of taxation it might be well to mention some of the unjust workings of our present tariff system. The McKinley law abounds in both ad-valorum and specific duties. In the Mills bill which was framed several years ago on democratic principles, all duties being ad-valorum. For example all woolen clothes were taxed according to their money value. The fine broadcloth worn by a rich man, worth $8 a yard, was taxed a per cent on $8, while the cloth worn by the poor man, worth $1 a yard was taxed the same per cent. If the duty was 50 per cent the rich man paid a duty of $4 a yard, while the poor man paid 50 cents. The McKinley bill adds a specific duty of forty cents a pound, which is unjust and unequal. The rich man's cloth weighs one pound, and the poor man's cloth, being coarse and heavy weighs three pounds. The former would pay a specific duty of forty cents while the latter (the poor man) is taxed $1.20. Is this fair and just? And can there be any good reason for it? We answer no. Now if it is true, as stated, that this country consumes $1,000,000 worth of the products of the protected industries and pays for them say 40 per cent or $400,000,000 more than they could be brought for from any other source, who foots the bill? In other words as the labor of the country produces all the wealth we have, does not that same labor have to stand the enormous tax? And how is it compensated therefor? It is said money talks. Yes, but it can not buy salvation. "Simon Magus offered money for the gift of the Holy Ghost. But "thy money perish with thee" said the apostle. Give us honest money, honest laws, well framed and judiciously executed and this country will stand forever. JOHN H. MCGARY.

THE total number of families in the United States in 1890 was 12,690,152.

THE sunflower bears 4,000 seeds, the poppy 32,000 and the tobacco plant 72,320, and yet the cigar crop never seems to bring prices down.

AT a charity bazar in Vienna an Englishman offered $5,000 for a single kiss from the Marchioness Pallaviccini. He got it and planked down a thousand-pound Bank of England note to pay for it.

FRANK VINCENT, the African explorer, has left Ragoon to continue his travels into the interior. He has already traveled over 300,000 miles without meeting with any serious disaster or accident.

THE German government has expended $400,000 in building a factory at Spandau for the preserving of all kinds of provisions for the army, and about 550 operators are to be regularly employed there.

A BELL that could be heard at a distance of 45,000 feet in water could be heard at a distance of only 656 feet in the open air. Dogs barking on the earth can be heard by balloonists sailing at a height of four miles.

SIMON R. WALKINGSTICK, a full-blooded Cherokee Indian, has been admitted at Muskogee, I. T., to practice law in the United States courts. Mr. Walkingstick has the distinction of being the first Indian ever admitted by the United States courts upon examination.

MISS EMMA MONAHAN, of St. Louis, has written 9,100 words on the old-style postal card. She did the work without a magnifying glass and with a common lead pencil. Every line and word of it is legible through a glass, and a part of it plain enough to be read by the naked eye.

THE profession of prize fighting still pays. Last year the forty leading men in it cleared an aggregate of $149,680, Corbett leading the list with $25,000, half the salary of the president of the United States, three times as much as a cabinet minister earns and five times as much as United States senators receive.

HERBERT SPENCER has been writing for more than forty years, and a partial estimate of the profits from the sale of his most important books shows that they have brought him less than £1,000 a year. Decidedly philosophy does not pay the philosopher in cash, whatever it may give him in intellectual satisfaction.

A NEW opal field has been discovered in the state of Washington. With the diamond mines in Idaho, the ruby deposits of Montana and the opals of Washington at their very doors, as it were, the hotel clerks of the hilarious west will be able to fit themselves out after a fashion that Solomon in all his glory never dreamed of.

THE prevalent idea that the oldest university is in Europe is incorrect. In the tenth and eleventh centuries the university at Fez, Africa, was almost the only seat of Arabic and Christian learning in the world. Before universities existed in Paris, Oxford, Cambridge, Padua or Bologna students flocked to Fez from Andalusia, France, and even England, and Fez is to-day the principal western seat of Mohammedan theology.

MOST amateur tragedies generally have the effect of comedy, but the one played in San Francisco the other night where the heroine turned her ankle just as she was about to plunge the knife into the villain's breast and actually killed the very estimable gentleman, the author of the play, ended in a worse tragedy than the play itself. It is one consolation, however, that just such an accident as that is not likely to happen more than once in a hundred years at least.

THE supreme court of Pennsylvania has decided that the old blue law, enacted in 1794 and relating to certain worldly pursuits on the Sabbath day, is still in force. The case upon which the decision was rendered was that of Thomas Matthews, publisher of the Pittsburgh Sunday Leader, who was convicted of publishing and issuing his paper on Sunday under this act. The court in conclusion commends the act, but says that a too liberal enforcement of its provisions may lead to its repeal, and that it is in more danger from its friends than its foes.

THOSE who are unacquainted with the facts in the case often express surprise when told that not more than one man in 500 who has been struck by lightning survives, and that with the larger animals the ratio is still smaller. The electromotive force of a bolt of lightning, says an electrician, is about 3,500,000 volts, the current about 14,000,000 amperes, and the time of the discharge about 1-20,000 part of a second! In such a bolt there is an energy equal to 2,450,000,000 watts, or about 3,284,182 horse-power! Is it any wonder that "lightning usually kills?"

A TENNESSEE judge named Springfield, presiding over a court at Chattanooga, announced the other day that no person in necessitous circumstances will be punished in his court for stealing coal from the coal trust. Several men and women who had been arrested for depredations on the ring coal yards were discharged. Judge Springfield has original notions of equity not exactly in conformance with modern legal methods of jurisprudence. But, with the thermometer at ten below zero and coal at trust prices, the native sense of justice makes strong appeals to a merciful magistrate.

ONE of the most significant signs of the times is the fact, just made public, that a young lady is to be graduated next June from conservative old Johns Hopkins university with the highest degree in its gift—that of doctor of philosophy. The recipient of this unprecedented honor is Miss Florence Bascom, daughter of Prof. John Bascom of Williams college, Massachusetts, who from 1884 to 1887 was president of the university of Wisconsin. From this western institution Miss Bascom has already received the degrees of bachelor of arts, bachelor of literature, bachelor of science and master of arts.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES.

Items Regarding the Doings of Legislators at the Capitol.

Mr. Wacek's attempt to cut the mileage of the members from 15 cents to 3 cents failed. When it came up in committee of the whole, Mr. Wacek recommended its passage.

Mr. Turrel was in favor of a reduction of the mileage, but not in favor after most of the senate and house had drawn the mileage at 15 cents. It was unfair to do so to the members of the next house. He saw no way but for members, in supporting this bill, to pay back the difference into the treasury. Mr. Turrel moved to indefinitely postpone.

Mr. Young favored the present mileage, for it does not pay the trips made necessary during the session to and from home, unless members have passes. He had none, he said.

Mr. O'Neill corroborated Mr. Young. He had to pay for his transportation with wheat at 50 cents a bushel.

Mr. Turrel urged the inconsistency of the measure.

Mr. Lockwood opposed the bill. He had drawn his mileage, he said, and spent it.

The bill was recommended to be postponed by a very large majority.

Senator Tawney has a bill under way which, if it becomes a law, will place a tax of $2 per $100 on all legacies, providing the estate is valued less than $10,000. In such cases the estates are free. The bill further provides that the tax is due at the time of the death of the decedent, and if paid within 18 months thereafter shall be exempt from interest charges. A penalty of 10 per cent per annum for non-payment is charged, unless it is not possible to settle an estate in the 18 months, in which case only 4 per cent is charged. The probate judge shall have power to appoint appraisers to fix the value of disputed estates and the value shall be fixed under his personal supervision. Each county treasurer shall receive a commission of 2 per cent on the first $5,000 collected by him under the provisions of this act, 1 per cent on the next $15,000, and one-quarter of 1 per cent on all sums collected in excess of $20,000.

The bill introduced by Senator Probstfield contemplates a heavy undertaking. It orders the establishment of two places for exhibits, wholesale markets and storage rooms for the farm products of the state. The grounds of the State Agricultural society are fixed as one of these places, and a commission consisting of the president of the Farmers' alliance, mayor of St. Paul, presidents of the State Agricultural and Horticultural societies, State Dairymen's association, mayors of Duluth and Minneapolis, the ex-president of Minnesota State Farmers' alliance, George W Sprague, T. A. Barrett, E. H. Atwood and R. J. Hall, is created to locate the second place somewhere in St. Louis county on the shore of St. Louis bay or river, where there is navigable water and where docks can be established. The committee is authorized to procure necessary land and erect buildings, build spur tracks and terminal yards to and at both elevator sites and to commence work at once, so that the buildings will be ready to receive grain on the first day of September of the present year. The bill requires that the Hamline elevator shall have a capacity of 1,000,000 bushels and the Duluth elevator 2,000,000; also facilities for weighing, clearing, etc., and separate bins for quantities of one car load or more.

There is a desire to make the sleeping car companies pay a share of the taxes. To this end the senate adopted the following:

Whereas, The supreme court of the United States in the case of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania against Pullman's Palace Car company, reported in 141 U. S., Rep. page 18, has decided that the property of sleeping car companies is subject to taxation by the several states in which its cars are operated, without regard to whether the same constitutes interstate traffic; therefore,

Resolved, By the senate, the house concurring, that the committees on judiciary of the senate and the house be, and they are, hereby instructed at their earliest convenience jointly to examine and report whether any constitutional or legal obstacles exist to placing such property upon the tax roll for the current year, and if, in their opinion, any legislation is necessary, to report a proper bill for that purpose.

The committee made a favorable report on Jacobson's bill for the erection of public grain warehouses and elevators on the right of way of public railroads and the condemnation proceedings in connection therewith. The bill was amended a little, the clause prohibiting the erection of elevators within 100 feet of any other structure and within close proximity to a railroad station being stricken out. The bill is almost an exact copy of a bill that was passed by the house two years ago, and provides for railroad companies giving permission to any corporation for the erection of grain warehouses along its road without any discrimination or regard to capacity. When the report came before the house Mr. Bjorge wanted his bill of the same import considered at the same time, so the measure was recommitted.

Senator Smith defends his Legislative Gazette idea by saying that the printing of the the laws will be embodied in the Gazette. thus saving a big appropriation. Very true, but according to his estimate he provides for only about 1,000 copies of the Gazette each day, whereas before every subscriber of every country paper received a copy, something that they will not get under the Gazette regime. The Gazette is "no go" anyway, as four out of five of the house members of the committee are opposed to the idea, and one member offered to bet $5 that the proposition did not have ten friends in the house.

The following committees were announced by President Clough in the senate: Sanitary affairs and quarantine laws, Senators Tawney, Dean, Bell, Daugherty and Mayo; taxation of logs and lumber and to inquire into the taxation of railroad lands, Senators Dedon, Smith, J. D., and Leavitt.

The house committee on state normal schools will visit all the schools of the state, and has issued an invitation to the members of both houses to accompany the committee. The Winona and Mankato schools will be visited first.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Doings of the State Law Makers at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 17.—Nothing was done in either branch of any importance, save to cast the first ballot for United States senator. At noon both houses proceeded to vote. In the senate the result was: C. K. Davis 29, D. W. Lawler 17, S. M. Owen 11, W. R. Merriam 2, John Lind 1, D. A. Dickinson 1, Albert Scheffer 1, C. M. Start 1.

The vote in the house was: C. K. Davis 67, D. W. Lawler 31, S. M. Owen 12, Moses E. Clapp 1, C. M. Start 1, Albert Scheffer 1.

Senator Davis not receiving a majority in each of the houses, there was no election

ST. PAUL, Jan. 18.—The legislative session today was of short duration owing to the intervening of the joint convention. In the senate a resolution was adopted looking to the taxation of logs and lumber and of land grants, and a special committee thereon is to be appointed. A bill was introduced appropriating $150 000 for a building for the State Historical society.

In the house the pending resolution for investigating the high price of coal was passed, calling for a joint house and senate committee of nine.

Joint resolutions on the death of ex-President Hayes were passed, and after the election of a United States senator both houses adjourned for the day. At noon both houses met in joint convention for the election of a United States senator. C. K. Davis was elected, receiving 85 votes. The details will be found in another column.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 19.—When the senate convened Senator Crandall introduced a resolution inquiring of the state treasurer why some railcompanies pay 1 per cent, others 2 per cent and still others 3 per cent gross earnings tax, as appears from his report, and why such gross earnings tax is not paid in equal percentages by all roads. The resolution was adopted. Bills were introduced appropriating $50.000 for the normal school at Mankato; appropriating $2 000 to widen and improve the channel of certain lakes in Kandiyohi county and Shakopee creek, in Swift county; providing that one-half of the money received from liquor licenses by villages shall be turned into the county revenue fund; to provide election penalties for township and village elections, making present law applicable to these elections; to amend the probate law relating to wards and guardians; to legalize the defective execution of deeds, etc. In the committee of the whole the question of the income tax was considered, but no action was obtained.

In the house the following bills were introduced: Relating to the issuance of liquor licenses; to regulate elections; to repeal the law for capital punishment and to make murder punishable by life imprisonment; to repeal the law of 1879; to punish drunkenness by fine and imprisonment; to establish state elevator and warehouse by the state (nearly the same as the pending senate bill of Probstfield for locating one market at Hamline and one at Duluth); to regulate the expenses of candidates; to regulate the holding of conventions and primaries. At 11:30 the house adjourned until Friday.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 20.—The senate passed the memorial asking congress to appropriate $25,000 to improve the Minnesota river in Scott county. Bills were introduced as follows: Amending the constitution limiting legislative sessions to 60 days; to provide for a revision of the laws; appropriating $63,560 for the state public school at Owatonna; providing for the organization of mutual, co-operative and fraternal insurance companies; to provide for the garnishment of municipal corporations; relating to the taxation of costs in civil actions. In the committee of the whole Senator Leavitt's bill for the taxation of incomes was taken under discussion. Several amendments were proposed, but were not disposed of.

A message from the house announced that the senate resolution of adjournment out of respect to the memory of ex-President Hayes had been concurred in and Senator Sanborn moved that the senate adjourn until Monday at 3 p. m. A number of senators explained that they voted nay because they were opposed to the adjournment until Monday, and not out of disrespect to the memory of the lamented ex-president. The motion prevailed by a vote of 23 to 23 and the senate adjourned until Monday at 3 p. m.

The house spent the morning hour in considering the report of legislative expenses. No bills were introduced. After passing the senate resolutions on the death of ex-President Hayes adjournment was made until Monday.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 23.—By good luck there was just a quorum present when the senate met at 3 p. m. In committee of the whole Leavitt's bill to tax incomes was again considered. This bill is productive of a good deal of argument, as each senator seems to have a distinct, personal idea regarding the measure, and these ideas are not all harmonious. The following bills were introduced: Authorizing sheriffs and deputies to complete foreclosure sales after expiration of office; to permit cities and counties to renew the present tax on personal property; to regulate primary and political caucuses; amending the law relating to managers of state reformatory; to amend the state constitution by providing for the forfeiting to the state of lands remaining unoccupied by railroad companies for the time of two years after the adoption of the amendment.

The house held a short session. The speaker being absent, Mr. Wyman occupied the chair. The following bills were introduced: To change the rate of interest on state loans from 7 to 5 per cent; to authorize the election of highway commissioners; relating to weights and measures; to regulate the hiring or employment of persons at labor; proposing to tax incomes; to limit the time in which to commence proceedings to recover on stock and bonds issued by corporation (it limits the time to six months); relating to building and loan associations, limiting salaries, etc.; allowing villages of over 3,000 to establish municipal courts; authorizing electric lines to be built through townships under certain conditions. An important bill was sent up by Mr. Winston amending the general election laws. Adjourned until 10 a. m. Tuesday.

BEDS OF ALL NATIONS.

THE Japanese lie upon matting with a stiff, uncomfortable wooden neck rest.

THE ancient Greeks or Romans had their bed supported on frames, but not flat like ours.

THE Chinese use low bedsteads, often elaborately carved, and supporting only mats or coverlids.

THE Egyptians had a couch of a peculiar shape, more like an old-fashioned easy chair with hollow back and seat.

IN England the old four-posted bedstead is the pride of the nation; but the iron or brass bedstead is fast becoming universal. The English beds are the largest beds in the world.

IN the tropics men sleep in hammocks or upon mats of grass. The East Indian unrolls his light portable charpoy, or mattress, which, in the morning, is again rolled together and carried away by him.

A PECULIARITY of the German bed is its shortness; besides that it frequently consists in a sort of large down pillow or upper mattress, which spreads over the person and usually answers the purpose of all other bed-clothing combined.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Davis is Elected.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 19.—Cushman K. Davis has been elected to succeed himself in the United States senate from Minnesota for the full term of six years, beginning on March 4 next. Every one of the 168 members of the legislature was present in the joint session, which was called at noon yesterday, and if there had been no opposition to Davis he would have had 26 majority, which number represents the lead of the republican majority on joint ballot. Instead of this, however, he received only 85 votes, or a bare majority. The last man to vote for Davis was the speaker of the house, whose name appeared at the bottom of the roll call, and until the speaker had been heard from the election of Davis was not accomplished.

The vote stood as follows: Davis 85, Lawler 48, Owen 24, Clapp 3, Merriam 2, Lind 2, Scheffer 2, Start 1, Dickinson 1.

This was about 12:15 p. m. At 12:40 the ballot was completed, and in a minute or two thereafter it was announced by the speaker. The entire matter, therefore, did not last longer than 40 minutes.

The vote of the senators was as follows:

The Messaba Railroad.

State Geologist W. H. Winchell has issued Part IV. of the twentieth annual report of the state geological survey, dealing with the Messaba iron range. The pamphlet consists of 180 pages and is comprehensive in its treatment of the range from a geological standpoint and minute in its description of the formations. The pamphlet contains a description of all the mines opened up, a list of all companies organized to operate mines, and a chapter on the quantity of ore in the Messaba range. He estimates the total cost of placing this ore in Cleveland at $3.10, including all possible expenses. This will allow the range from 50 cents to $1 margin of profit over all other iron ores in that market.

The News in Brief.

Henry Walters and B. Munch, two young men who work in the Crookston brewery, came very near meeting death in a beer vat by being suffocated with coal gas.

Register Thompson, of the United States land office at Crookston has just completed his report of the year's business, ending Dec. 31. The total cash receipts of the office during the year were $28,401.98. There were 597 homestead entries, 414 final entries and 122 cash entries, and, with the timber and railroad selections, making a total of 1,172 entries, aggregating 164,553.21 acres.

The Farmer and the Grocer.

A grocer would not pay a farmer the price of a ten-pound turkey for one that weighed but seven pounds.

Why should a farmer pay a grocer the price of the Royal Baking Powder for a baking powder with 27 per cent. less leavening strength?

The Royal Baking Powder is proven by actual tests to be 27 per cent. stronger than any other brand on the market. Better not buy the others, for they mostly contain alum, lime and sulphuric acid; but if they are forced upon you, see that you are charged a correspondingly lower price for them.

STILL TRUE.

Though others at thine outlines scoff,
And fail thy charms to see,
Only too glad to take thee off,
To jeer and gibe at thee,

Mine eyes thy curves admiring trace
As, constant in my love,
Thee with grave reverence I place
All else I own above.

When wintry storms around us rush
Thy tottering frame I stay,
Or bear thee swiftly home to brush
Thy gathered tears away.

When Phœbus' rays beat fiercely down,
And timorous souls withdraw
From the protection of thy crown,
To trust in powers of straw,

I with a calm and steadfast mind
To thy dear side adhere,
And, in thy close embrace confined,
No sun God's arrows fear.

My heart to thee I lost outright,
Ay! lost beyond recall,
When first I saw thee fresh and bright,
And so divinely tall.

And though since then both thou and I
Have somewhat older grown,
Though, touched by Anno Domini,
Thine earlier bloom has flown,

I will uphold thee to the end
No whit the less for that!
Nay! greater care thine age shall tend,
My dear old stove-pipe hat!

THE CORAL BRACELETS.

They Found a Protector for a Friendless Girl.

"Put on more coal, Hawkins," said Nina Pelham querulously, as she sat in front of the blazing grate.

Hawkins, a solemn and somewhat consequential looking servant, obeyed his young mistress, but paused a moment after he had heaped the coal upon the red-hot bars.

"If you please, Miss Nina, there's a young person downstairs would like to see you."

"What kind of a person, Hawkins?" questioned Nina, languidly lifting her eyes.

"She's very genteel-spoken—a real lady, you'd think, if it wasn't that she's dressed so shabbily."

"It isn't the dressmaker?"

"No, Miss Nina."

"Nor anybody come after the lady's maid's situation?"

"No, miss, I should say not—she doesn't look like a lady's maid."

"Well, show her up!"

And Nina's pretty head settled back among the cushions of her chair with returning indolence. But the instant her eye fell on the sweet, pale face of the slender looking girl who advanced timidly into the room, she sat upright with genuine surprise depicted in her countenance.

"Anna Wharton! Is it possible?"

"You recognize me, Nina?" said the stranger. "It is so long since we were schoolmates at Mme. Sauriat's that I thought you would scarcely remember me."

"Sit down," said Nina, motioning toward a chair.

Miss Wharton did not sit down, but went on speaking in a hesitating voice.

"Of course you have heard of our misfortunes—my father's failure and death, and my mother's subsequent decease?"

"I had not heard of it," said Nina, contemplating her dainty slippers.

"I am compelled to earn my daily bread," resumed Anna. "Heretofore I have experineced no difficulty in comfortably supporting both myself and my little brother. But since he has fallen ill—"

"I am sorry, but my allowance of pocket money is so very small that—" Anna Wharton colored scarlet.

"You entirely misunderstand me—I do not come here to beg."

She drew a little morocco box from her pocket and opened it.

"I remember you used to admire these corals very much in our school days. I have been loth to part with them up to this time. But my brother is dying. I wish to sell the bracelets, Nina, and I thought you might like to purchase them."

Nina leaned forward in her chair and took the box, her eyes sparkling at the sight of the beautifully carved coral, veined with the softest rose-color, that lay in the simple casket. She had been endeavoring for a year to obtain a set of rose coral, and here at length it was, ready to her hand.

"How much do you expect to receive for them?"

"Papa gave eighty dollars for them in Italy."

Nina shrugged her shoulders.

"Of course you can't expect to get a twentieth part of that price for them now?"

"Nina, I am at your mercy in this matter. Whatever you may please to give I must accept, for I am straitened by necessity."

"I will give you five dollars," said Nina, compressing her lips.

"Five dollars!"

And Anna Wharton thought, with a sinking heart, of the dainties she had fondly hoped to buy for her sick brother from the proceeds of these delicate ornaments.

"Just as you please," observed Nina, coldly.

Anna silently placed the ornaments on the table beside Miss Pelham, and held out a thin hand, that would tremble a little, in spite of her effort at self control, for the money.

"What exquisite corals! I could not buy them for one hundred dollars!" was Nina's exclamation the moment she was left alone. "Really, I think I am the luckiest little creature in the world. Now I must go and order that new bonnet, for Dr. Carleton has invited me to drive with him to-morrow."

The fashionable milliner's rooms were filled with the shopping community that afternoon as Miss Pelham swept in. She fluttered from table to stand, glancing at the various attractions, and dispensing a gracious word here and there, until at length she came to a standstill, fascinated by an elegant chapeau, which had been produced from its bandbox for her especial delectation.

"Oh, what a beauty! Do tell me the price, madam," she ejaculated, with sparkling eyes.

"A trifle—a mere trifle," said the milliner, putting the strings with soft little hands, around the taper fingers of which fashionable ladies were daily "wound" by the score. "Thirty-five dollars is all."

"Thirty-five dollars! I hardly dare to pay so much for a bonnet, madam," said Nina. "Papa scolds about my extravagance and makes such dreadful faces over the bills."

The wily Mme. D'Heriot held up the article under discussion, and turned it one way and another, so that the sunshine fell full on the delicate velvet, shadowed with foamlike plumes.

"I must have it," said Nina, decidedly. "Send it home at once, madam. If papa chooses to scold I can't help it."

The brief colloquy between the belle and the milliner had had two auditors of whose presence Nina Pelham was totally unconscious. Dr. Carleton and his sister were waiting in an adjoining ante-room for some trifling alteration to be made in Miss Carleton's chapeau. She turned to her brother with an arch glance.

"So, Ned," she said, rather maliciously, as sisters are wont to speak of ladies whom their brothers admire, "you will persist in admiring that Miss Pelham! See what you'll be called upon to endure in the way of milliner's bills when she becomes Mrs. Carleton."

"She is so young and ingenious," said Carleton, in a tone of extenuation.

Miss Carleton made a little grimace.

"And do you really love that girl, Edward?"

"That is hardly a fair question. However, I am not unwilling to confess that I admire her."

"Admire!" repeated Alice Carleton, doubtfully.

"Yes, admire," said Carleton, quietly. "I never saw but one person whom I really thought I could love, as a man should love the woman who is to share his life, and she—here's your bonnet, all right at last. Come—I'm in a hurry."

Nina Pelham was never in better spirits, and had never looked lovelier than at the moment she entered. Dr. Carleton's trim little sleigh the next day. The exquisite plumes of the new French hat floated like a soft cloud above the pink cheeks; and through the embroidered drapery of her arms the coral bracelets gleamed like rosy serpents.

"Why, where are we going?" she exclaimed, as the spirited horses were suddenly turned into an unpretending and secluded street, instead of darting parkwards.

"I am taking you to-day in an entirely new direction," said Dr. Carleton, composedly. "I was called yesterday in a most unexpected manner to attend a little patient, whose sister, as I understand, was an old schoolmate of yours and an old acquaintance of ours."

"Indeed!" exclaimed Nina.

"It was Miss Anna Wharton."

"Is it possible?" ejaculated Nina, with well-acted surprise, although the cold sinking at her heart nearly choked her voice. "Poor Anna—I hope she is well!"

"Far from it," said the young physician, gravely. "And what is harder still to bear, she is in great want—almost penury."

He looked at her as he spoke.

"I wish I had known it!" said Nina, artlessly; "it would have given me so much pleasure to assist her."

"Your wishes shall be gratified. I am bringing you to her humble home to-day," returned Carleton, gravely, as he drew up his horses close to the curbstone.

Miss Pelham followed him, scarcely knowing what she was about, so chagrined and bewildered was she at the unexpected turn events had taken. As they reached the second landing place, he threw open a door and beckoned her to enter.

The room revealed to her sight was very small and scantily furnished. On a low couch, near the window, lay a sick child with wan, attenuated cheeks, and eyes that seemed to burn with preternatural luster, and close beside him sat Anna Wharton.

"Miss Anna," said the doctor, as she rose in some surprise at their entrance, "here is your friend, Miss Pelham. I wish her fully to understand, through you, that I am perfectly aware of the depth and sincerity of her friendship, as exemplified in the case of the coral bracelets she now wears."

Nina turned pale and red by turns.

"If you please, Miss Pelham," said Dr. Carleton, with freezing politeness, "allow me to return this five-dollar bill to you, as Miss Wharton has no present need for it. Her gratitude is of course proportioned to your extreme generosity."

And Nina Pelham left the room with the comfortable conviction that she had lost a lover and Anna Wharton had gained one.—Brandon Banner.

Why Not?

An English gentleman and his wife who were visiting friends in Scotland were taken to see an interesting monastery not far from Cluny, their friends' estate. In that part of the country a man is known by the name of his estate. When they were asked to write in the monastery visitors' book, the Englishman noticed that his host, Mr. MacPhearson, wrote "Cluny and Mrs. MacPhearson." Not to be outdone, the Englishman promptly wrote: "26 Lennox Gardens, Pont street, and Mrs. Lockwood." Another story is told of Mr. Lockwood, in which his part is not, one must conclude, as innocent as it looks. He is evidently fond of a joke. He often visits extremely wealthy and hospitable friends in the country. These friends have a room ready for him whenever he cares to occupy it. The house is seven miles from a railway station or telegraph office. He once telegraphed them from London: "May I stay over Sunday?" His host paid ten or twelve shillings to the messenger and replied: "Of course, but don't telegraph." To this Lockwood innocently replied, by telegraph: "Why not?"—Youth's Companion.

Real Cause of His Grief.

"Yes, I dabbled in futures once," said the man in the mackintosh, reflectively.

"Wheat?" inquired the man who had his feet on the table.

"No. And it wasn't corn, or oats, or barley, or mess pork, or potatoes, or chips, or whetstones. It was broom-corn. I thought there was money in broom corn."

"Put much money in it?" asked the man in the shaggy ulster.

"More money than judgment," sighed the man in the mackintosh, gloomily.

"How much did you lose?"

"I lost $50,000 I had hoped to make out of the deal."

"Was that all?"

"All? No. I lost $18,000 I had borrowed from friends—"

"Have they got it yet?"

"And that wasn't all!" groaned the man in the mackintosh, unheeding the interruption, and wiping his eye furtively with the corner of his handkerchief, "I lost $87.65 of my own money!"—Chicago Tribune.

—"Why did Dawson leave Hawser, Ropes & Co.?" "He didn't like the way they did things." "What did they do that he didn't like?" "Bounced him."

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—The Woman's college of Baltimore has over 600 students this year.

—The American Whig and Cliosophical societies of Princeton have challenged the Yale union to a joint debate. Yale has accepted, and the time, place and subject will be announced later. The place will probably be New York.

—Mr. Emerson Bainbridge, a Wesleyan Methodist layman of Sheffield, England, has given $50,000 for the erection in that city of a "shelter building" to supplement the work of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

—New York City shows a good record in the matter of suspensions in the public schools. Last year there were but thirty-five of these 250 schools that experienced such an extreme measure of discipline. The number suspended was only fifty-one in an attendance of nearly 200,000.

—The M. E. church has lost but one of its bishops by accident, Bishop Emory, who was fatally injured by being thrown from his carriage. In all their railway traveling in this country they have escaped accident and death. Two of them, however, have died abroad—Bishop Wiley in China, and Bishop Kingsley in Beyrut.

—It has been left to a resident of North Carolina to discover the most novel way to endow a college. His proposition is to insure the lives of fifty men, between the ages of 40 and 50, for $10.000 each, and then, as the policies are collected, convert them into a fund for the college in question. This would mean a clear $500,000.

—Women are steadily working their way into all desirable places among medical circles. At the last meeting of the British Medical association it was voted to accept them as members. German universities are likely soon to give them equal privileges with men, and the governors of the Edinburgh Royal infirmary have agreed to admit female students to two wards—an entering wedge which will in time give them access to the whole institution.

—A papyrus manuscript found in the den of an old hermit near Jerusalem in the year 1880, and which experts have all along believed to have been the handiwork of St. Peter, "the friend of Christ," was submitted to the Biblical society of London in 1890. They have arrived at the conclusion that the work is in reality exactly what it purports to be—the last literary work of the great apostle. It has not been ascertained exactly who has charge of the relic, but it is said that a "society of British literary voluptuaries" has offered a hundred thousand dollars for the document.—St. Louis Republic.

—Complaint comes from all denominations of Nonconformists in England that there are too many candidates for the ministry. The output of ministers is steadily increasing, while there is no corresponding increase in the demand for their services, and the Nonconformist branch of the clerical profession is getting grievously overstocked. This, it is asserted, does not mean a spreading of rationalistic ideas, but that altogether too many young men make the mistake of imagining they hear a call to the ministry. Churches and chapels are as plentiful and as well filled as ever. The profession, some of the heads of the church say, is becoming demoralized by this overplus of ministers. The clergymen are advertising themselves, craving for notoriety in "saying smart things," and otherwise showing bad effects of being crowded

RACING WITH A TRAIN.

The Remarkable Performance of a Swift-Winged Pigeon.

The pigeon's flight is the marvel of natural history. Pigeons have been killed in the far north six hundred miles from the nearest rice fields with green rice in their crops and undigested. It is a matter of course that the exertion of rapid flight delayed digestion, yet they must have traveled nearly sixty miles an hour. Like other birds, they fly for some defined purpose as a rule, but it is evident that, like most other animals, boys included, they often do their best just for the fun of it.

Such, no doubt, is the case with that white pigeon which was at first looked on as a "hoodoo," but is now regarded as a "mascot" by the crew of a train (No. 4 fast) running between Richmond, Ind., and Marion, O., on the N. Y., P. & O. railroad. One fine morning last month this pigeon surprised the crew by flying along just in front of the engine and about on a level with the headlight. By way of change it would lift its body in the air, and if by chance it floated over the top of the smokestack the force of the exhaust of steam would send it heavenward faster than its wings could take it, and it was powerless to resist the momentum. Nothing daunted, it would instantly resume its place at the head of the fast-flying engine, its swift wings keeping easy pace with the rapid-revolving drivers.

The bird evidently liked the fun and kept it up day after day. The crew threw out bits of bread to attract its attention; it ate the bread, but resumed its place at once. Two weeks of this made some of the boys superstitious, but on examining the oracles they found that a white pigeon always means good luck, and were delighted. And at last accounts the bird was still with them.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

Fine Bedsteads.

A bed was made in Paris for an Indian prince, who paid thousands of pounds for it. It was constructed partly of silver, with large female figures at each corner, each holding a delicate-looking fan. The weight of the sleeper's body sets certain machinery in motion which causes the figures to keep the fans gently in motion—an ingenious luxury in a hot climate. By touching a spring a large musical box is made to give forth soft music as a further incentive to slumber. Another bedstead made of silver is said to have been occupied by the German emperor during his visit to the Sultan. It had oriental curtains of surpassing richness, heavily embroidered with gold. What a contrast this presents to the simple iron camp beds affected by Prince Bismarck and Moltke and other renowned leaders.—Chambers' Journal.

THE GOULDS.

MRS. A. M. HOUGH, a sister of the late Jay Gould, resides at Los Angeles, Cal. She is the wife of a retired Methodist minister.

IT is said that at one time Jay Gould intended to expend a million dollars in facilities for the classical education of young men.

JAY GOULD'S tomb in Woodlawn cemetery, New York city, cost $80,000. It is thirty-three feet long, twenty-two feet wide and twenty feet high.

EDWIN GOULD has a collection of 20,000 newspaper clippings on the death of his father, which, combined, constitute an obituary six miles long.

MISS HELEN GOULD was the good Santa Claus to the 200 children in the New York home for the homeless. She gave them a Christmas tree, a big turkey dinner, toys and dolls by the hundreds, with oranges and candies besides.

MONEY NOTES.

A THRIFTY farmer in Brunswick, Me., paid his tailor for a suit of clothes with 3,000 coppers. They weighed 21 pounds, and he had been saving them for years.

A CONFECTIONER, being curious as to the weight of 500 pennies, placed them in a paper bag on a confectioner's scales and found that they weighed 3 pounds 5¼ ounces.

ACCORDING to the records of the United States mint, 19,570 silver dollars were coined in the year 1804. Of this number but eight are now known, and they are valued at from $500 to $2,000 each.

DURING the G. A. R. encampment at Washington 100,000 new 10-cent pieces, 40,000 quarters and 20,000 half-dollar pieces were carried away from the treasury exchange by visitors for souvenirs.

What Are We There For?

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Jan. 21.—Grover Cleveland returned from the funeral of ex-President Hayes passed through here today and at the station this dialogue with a reporter took place:

"Do you believe a repeal of the Sherman law will be passed?"

"I hope so."

"Do you oppose free coinage?"

"I have nothing to say on this question."

"Have you anything to offer the public on the tariff? Will the McKinley tariff law be repealed?"

"I'd like to know what else we are in power for.

Why I am a Democrat.

BY MISS GRACE O'HAIR.

The democrats believe in tariff for revenue only and in the "Demonitization of silver." They are opposed to the Force bill. A "tariff for revenue only" is all that is needed. When the country was new it was all very well to have a Protective tariff, but at the present time, when the manufactories are so well advanced and the manufacturers so wealthy they need no protection. In having "Tariff for Revenue only" a person purchasing goods will have to pay for their real value, and a small tax in return for the protection he receives from his country. Under a protective tariff the purchaser will not only pay for the real value of goods but a double tax which is wholly unnecessary. The products of American manufactories are bought in England as cheap as in this country. This is not just, for the people of this country to have to pay just as much for goods manufactured in their own as the English, and then pay a double price for English goods. And in the question of labor. Of course each side claims that their way of governing will raise the wages of the working men. Now, in having only a very small tax these workingmen can live cheaper, and their wage are surely as high. In having protective tariff the rich manufacturers are not willing to give their employees what wages they should have, for the paupers of foreign countries coming over here are willing to work for almost anything, and then they crowd out the Americans. And then it costs them so much to live under this tariff that no wonder we hear of so many strikes.

Both of the old parties believe in "Demonitization of Silver" that is they believe in limiting the amount of silver coined. The People's Party believe in Free Silver. Having no limit to the coinage of silver, money would decrease in value, greatly. If they should strike a silver mine and there would be no limit to the amount of silver and all of this be coined the country would be flooded with money. Then say the value of a dollar would only be $.50 and then a man in debt owing a certain amount of money would pay only fifty cents for every dollar, and this would not be right. The Democrats do not believe in the Force Bill. This is a bill wanting the government to send out marshalls to see that the elections are carried on properly, especially in the south. A person can plainly see that the marshalls, being in the employment of the government, would naturally side with the party in power. And then it would be very hard for them to be perfectly just in the performance of their duties. Surely there is justice and reason in every point in the Democratic platform.

Educational.

It is not pleasant for parents to contemplate, that the characters of great men are firmly moulded by the rough hands of adversity. The lessons of adversity are not easily forgotten.

The will-power will not develop without freedom; and self-help and self-reliance furnish food for a healthy growth.

It has been wisely remarked "Without love and sympathy there can be no education, home becomes a place of torture, and school, a jail." Nature has wisely planned that all parents shall love and sympathize with their children. But when parental love makes indulgence a vice; when the follies of the child see no reproof in the parent's eye when all duty is for parent and any duty is too hard for the child; when the sympathies of the parent lead them to believe, what ought not to be true, without an investigation. Then, I say, the aim of parental love is most badly warped; that nature's check of love and sympathy has been over drawn.

It is easy for the teacher to love and sympathize with the pupil who has a sense of duty and a knowledge of right; but the child who is indolent, who fails to have any sense of duty, who seems to be destitute of any sense of right, this is the child that puzzles the inexperienced teacher; and often, the experienced is as well perplexed. His nature is a sterile place to plant love and sympathy. These seeds have not been planted in his heart with a tender mother's care.

The teacher can never sympathize with that child without going first to his home. The teacher may observe that the child is neglected by his mothers; that he is abused by the father; that his early life has been without system or discipline, that his time has been spent in a go-as you-please manner. He may observe any or all of these defects in the child's home training; but, in whatever way they may appear, it will be in a way to win the sympathies of the true teacher.

Children carry their homes to school and a parental throne is set up behind every desk. H. E. CRANDALL.

A BROKEN WING.

STORY OF A POEM THAT INSPIRED A DESPAIRING HEART.

One day a convict at Joliet prison, Illinois, picked up a paper from the corridor, on which were these lines:

I walked through the woodland meadows
Where sweet the thrushes sing,
And found on a bed of mosses
A bird with a broken wing.
I healed its wound, and each morning
It sang its old sweet strain;
But the bird with a broken pinion
Never soared as high again.

I found a young life broken
By sin's seductive art,
And touched with a Christ-like pity.
I took him to my heart,
He lived with a noble purpose,
And struggled not in vain;
But the life that sin had stricken
Never soared as high a gain.

But the bird with a broken pinion
Kept another from the snare
And the life that sin had stricken
Raised another from despair
Each loss has its compensation,
There is healing for every pain;
But the bird with a broken pinion
Never soars as high again.

In estimating the value of these verses to the finder, it must be understood that he had reformed in the early part of his imprisonment, but was at times greatly depressed over his past life.—The Northwestern Farmer and Breeder.

Among Our Exchanges.

Old Woman Kiehle was again appointed state superintendent of schools. Long may she reign.--Eden Valley Journal.

Since the late election the New York Press seems to have run shy of subjects for its brass rule picture gallery. Here is a suggestion for its editor, showing the workings of a high tariff, which might very appropriately be given space along side some of his own valuable specimens: The republican vote of the country before the McKinley law went into effect was something like this—

The same under the McKinley act—

Tin plate and postmasters' feathers are not the only things which appear to have gone down under high tariff.—Western Laborer.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

OUR NATION'S DEAD.

Our nation mourns her dead.
Bowed down is every head,
With respect, or with grief
For the Plumed Knight. Proud chief!
His was a stormy life.
In the thickest of strife.
A Statesman of rare gifts
That raises and that lifts
Men to a higher plain.
His labors not in vain.
Enshrined will be his name.
High on the temple of fame,
The name of James G. Blaine,
From the old state of Maine.

Delano, Minn., Jan. 28, 1893.

THE Hawaiian Islands, 2,000 miles west of California, are knocking for admission to the United States.

THE Silver question seems to be bobbing up pretty lively now-a-days. Since the tariff has been virtually settled and the people given to understand that the McKinley bill will be done away with, Silver seems to be the next question. At present it bids fair to be a question of short duration as the John Sherman bill is likely to be repealed.

YESTERDAY, Henry Smith, the negro ravisher of the little 3½ year old daughter of Policeman Henry Vance, of Paris, Texas, one of the most revolting crimes an record, the little victim being left mutilated and dead in the pasture, was burned at the stake in presence of an immense crowd of people from far and near. An account of the burning reads like one of witchcraft days.

THE bill appropriating an additional $100,000 toward the World's Fair display has passed the Senate by a vote of yeas 30, nays 22, and been handed over to the House for further consideration. The object of the bill is principally, to make good the balance which individuals in most of the counties throughout the state have pledged themselves for. This is a very bad precedent to establish. People can spend all the money they see fit for different objects and expect the legislature to reimburse them. This same World's Fair committee may see fit to double up again and have members of the House and Senate elected two years from now to vote an appropriation for the "deficiency." We don't favor this style of doing business.

DONNELLY, at the present time, is at the top of the list, and strung all the way down the roll of prominent men exhibited in our capital city, St. Paul, for the inspection of her citizens and the rest of the universe. The statesman and orator the original and parent stock, Ignatius, in his eulogy of James G. Blaine; S. Donnelly, in his maiden speech in the prosecution of a case of larceny, in which he was successful; and I. Donnelly, M. D., carrying off the Vice Presidency of the Ramsey county Medical Society go to sustain the truthfulness of the old adage "blood will tell" and that "by their fruits ye shall know them," to say nothing of the man of the same name and nation, who is poet laureate of the Saintly city. "Nothing succeeds like success." What a hole there would be in our scroll of fame were the name of Donnelly to be blotted therefrom.

OUR Republican friends are, already looking around for a victim for a candidate for U. S. Senator two years from now to supersede Mr. Washburn, who, no one appears to think will be able to hold the party together as C. K. Davis came so near failing to do, this season. Messrs. Clapp, Nelson and others receive favorable mention. It looks pretty cheeky to commence operations along this line so soon after the narrow escape just had. But the case is desperate, evidently, and no time is to be lost. We presume it will be pretty difficult to find candidates for the Legislature ready to pledge themselves to any one individual for the U. S. Senate again right away. And, when they are found the chances are, after the unpleasantness in our legislature that there will be so much opposition to them in their own party that they cannot be elected. We want a democratic legislature next time one that is not tied up to any individual for the office of U. S. Senator nor pledged to any scheme, but men with ideas of their own. Men whom it will not be necessary to send the wheelhorses of the party down to the capitol to see that they vote right. Men who will vote right on their own account. Men of broad ideas. Democrats.

"If you can't say anything good of a person don't say anything" is a motto which, sometimes, it were well to follow. Our double headed neighbor up street certainly takes the cake for one kind of literature. No one need try to excel her in this line. Why, the "Arabian Knights" "Baron Munchausen" and the balance are "not in it" with her. She, in chronicaling the every day occurrences of our community, apparently doesn't spoil her story for such a thing as a couple of days or so in giving the birthday of a new citizen, ruthlessly, chops off a man's "right" hand as if it were not enough to loose his "left," but when she comes to haying a man die on the wrong day, and have a Methodist instead of a Lutheran minister preach his funeral, and burying him in the wrong grave yard it looks pretty tough, but it is in keeping with some of her "tirades" on respectable citizens whom she seeks ever and anow, to defame by casting insinuations and making assertions concerning them and their actions, that would throw a shadow of about the same proportions were the strong light of truth turned onto them.

REPUBLICAN papers and orators claimed during the last campaign that the 5 cts per dozen tariff on eggs had increased the price, materially, and that farmers were reaping the benefit. But, lo! and behold! as time goes on the tables are turned. And now, right in the dead of winter, when ham and eggs would be nice for breakfast, the hen has gone on a strike; is boycotting her owner; and nearly or quite every manufactory in this section has suspended business entirely, and, although epicurians are offering three times what they paid during the campaign they can scarce obtain enough for their morning's pan cakes. The farmer can't get enough eggs for his own use. And the "poor laboring man" of the manufacturing cities of the east can pay that additional 5 cts per dozen for the imported article, or go without, as he sees fit. In case he buys a dozen that have been brought from some country where the hens are not on a strike he will have to pay the 5 cts all right, no matter if our farmers' hens don't derive any protection from it. It certainly is very unpatriotic from a Republican stand point, for those pesky chickens to refuse to take advantage of a law passed so expressly for their advantage, and at a time too when eggs are so scarce and hard to get.

Smoking.

It is astonishing how some intelligent and otherwise well mannered men will impose upon their fellow being by smoking. Smoking almost incessantly, right in the faces of people who do not smoke, of people to whom smoke is offensive. Blowing great clouds of smoke into the faces of innocent women and children, who are made sick by the fumes. The poisonous weed burned in an open vessel in the presence of the smoker even, would be considered a nuisance, they would not tolerate it. But go on themselves, in business houses and public places, on the streets and in public meetings, puffing their pipes or cigars, often of very poor quality, in the presence of those who would prefer to breath God's pure air, unpoluted by tobacco smoke. Of what use is it to a man or a boy to smoke? It does not improve his looks. It does not make him better understood when he talks, to have a cigar or pipe between his teeth. It does not put pennies in his pocket-book. It does not make him a more agreeable companion to those about him. It does not raise him in the estimation of people generally. Nor, when he gives the subject any thought, in his own estimation.

Farmers Who Make Money.

We are in receipt of a pamphlet by General C. C. Andrews, in which he gives a short report from a number of Minnesota farmers as to their mode of farming. Rotary crops and mixed farming and stock raising seems to lead in money making. A. J. Brown, of Watertown, thinks if dressed hogs can be sold for 6 cts per lb that it pays better than wheat at 85 cts per bushel. We reprint the report from Wright as it will be more interesting than one farther from home and it is a fair sample given from different counties throughout the state:

Mr. Geo. W. Rackliff, of Maple Lake, and brother, as partners, have a farm of 150 acres. Mr. Rackliff says:

Our plan is mixed farming. We raise some grain, hogs, sheep, and sell cream. Cultivate 50 acres, have 40 acres in pasture and 60 acres in wood land We sow wheat about two years then oats. Manure, plant corn and then the soil is in prime condition for grain, and with the above rotation will be so to the end of time. Our average yield has been: wheat, 20 bushels per acre, oats 50 bushels, corn about 50 bushel per acre, except last year (1890,) only half a crop, in consequence of dry weather. Rye 25 bushels per acre. Market our products at Buffalo and Maple Lake. We do not have to hire much labor; we generally hire a boy for 75 cents a day when needed. Our net profit is about $200 a year. At present our money is loaned at 8 per cent and secured by mortgage on real estate. The price of unimproved land in this county is from $10 to $15 per acre.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 27, 1893

The Fifty-second Congress may die in a Senatorial dead-lock unprecedented in the annals of congress, if Harison follows the adyice that is now being given him by prominent members of his party and nominates a republican as successor to the late Justice Lamar. The U. S. Supreme court is in theory, if not in fact, a non-partisan body, and the death of Justice Lamar leaves only two—Chief Justice Fuller and Justice Field—on its bench who were democrats before their appointments thereto; after a man takes his seat upon that bench he is not supposed to have any politics, but the democratic party knows to its cost what a mistaken idea that is. It is only justice to the people whose interests are constantly at stake in questions coming before this court that its membership should be as nearly divided between the political parties as possible, and for that reason the democratic senators are disposed to resort to every honorable method to prevent the addition of another republican to the six already sitting on the bench, and if Mr. Harrison nominates a republican to the vacancy they will, if they can, deadlock the senate, even if it results in hanging up all legislation and forcing an extra session of Congress. In view of Mr. Harrison's early retirement and the fact that the new Justice cannot take his seat until after President Cleveland's term begins, it would only be decency for Mr. Harrison to leave the vacancy for Mr. Cleveland to fill, and if it were not for the pressure that is being brought to bear upon him by his party associates it is believed that he would adopt that manly course. Should he nominate Attorney-General Miller, who has been his personal preference for every vacancy in the Court that has occurred during his term, it is believed that republican senators would be glad to see the nomination rejected. The greatest danger lies in the nomination of some republican like ex-Senator Spooner, whose personal popularity with democratic senators might prevent their voting against his confirmation.

Secretary Foster's report on the condition of the Treasury and his estimates of the probable receipts and expenditures for the remainder of this and for the next fiscal year is at last in the hands of the House Ways and Means committee. It is far from satisfactory, as it is known that the surplus which he figures out is obtained by failing to deduct liabilities amounting to $46,000,000, which will have to be met in the period covered by his estimates, and there may be more yet. That the committee is now at work trying to find out, and Mr Foster will probably have to undergo a rigid cross-questioning.

An amusing episode took place in the House one morning this week, just before the session began. Chief Wolf, of the Palouse tribe of Washington Indians in all the glory of a red blanket and red paint, was taking in the sights. After strolling around the hall for a while he walk up to the Speaker's chair and taking a seat therein calmly surveyed the members who were in their seats reading newspapers or writing letters. While he was sitting there a witty member remarked: "That's the first savage who has occupied the Speaker's chair since Reed vacated it." Reed was sitting near by and heard the remark, and he joined in the laugh which followed.

There is interesting rumor here to the effect that the republican National committee is engaged in setting up the pins to make J. S. Clarkson the republican candidate for President in 1896. The idea is not taken very kindly by the Harrison republicans who regard Clarkson as a "hoodoo" of the first order. By 1896, judging from present indications, the republican party will be past "hoodooing."

They asked for bread and received stones. The republican Senators from the new states having convinced their colleagues that their objections to the admission of the four territories now fully equipped for statehood was a party mistake, very injurious in the states they represent. A republican caucus of Senators was held to determine when and how the territories might be admitted. The first thing the caucus did was to strike Arizona from the list, as being too certainly democratic. Then it proceeded to arrange a programme, which, while acquiescing in the demands of Oklahoma Utah and New Mexico to be admitted to the family of States, only gives them about one chance out of a possible hundred to get the bills proyiding therefor through at this session of Congress. The programme as arranged gives the right of way to the territorial bills after the Cherokee strip, the anti-option and the Nicaragua canal bills are disposed of. What that right of way is worth may be judged from the fact that the Senate has not yet disposed of a single one of the appropriations bills.

The contract for the inauguration fireworks has been awarded to the St. Louis Fire works Co., the price being $4,650.

Snow is becoming so deep that cutting cord wood is slow business now. We have one of our Minnesota winter's back again.

L. F. Thompson went to Minneapolis, Monday, returning same evening.

Bert Kinney, of Minneapolis, spent Sunday and Monday with friends in Rockford.

The Delano and Rockford schools had a spelling match in the G. A. R. hall, Friday night last. The Delano school carried off the honors spelling the Rockford down twice, all except the Rockford scholars paid an admission fee of 10 cts and considering the large crowd in attendance they will have enough above expenses to purchase a few more volumes for their school library. The Rockford scholars took their defeat bravely and intend to defeat the Delano school at the next spelling match which will be held at Delano in the near future.

Among those who attended the spelling match from Delano were Mr. and Mrs. Corey, Mrs. L. Frazee, Misses Etta and Mabel Parsons, Miss A. R. Quinn, Miss Cheeley, Miss McCalpin, Prof. and Mrs. Dewey, Jno. Cunningham, Miss Sadie Van Eman, Edward Sutton and Miss Mabel Quinn.

It is generally understood that James A. Henderson will remain in the evangelical work with Rev. Sherbourn.

It appears that every girl in Delano imagined that Rev. Marsh was "after" her and there was so much talk about him being a fraud in the pulpit that he has been removed. I am of the opinion that Rev. Marsh was all right, and the bad things said of him were set afloat by a lot of know nothings who might have the decency to keep their mouths shut.

There was a pleasant surprise party at the home of Mr. Julius and Mrs. Minnie Hardt, on the evening of the 26th inst., in honor of Mr. Julius Hardt, who was 49 on that day. Mrs. W. H. Kennedy was also given a birthday party, on the evening of the 30th.

Lake Sarah Road.

Mr. Editor BUFFALO GAZETTE:—Sir Please allow me space in your paper to answer the item of Friday, January 20th, 1893, placed in the Rockford news in regard to the new road from Mr. Jenkins' place to Sarah lake. I think that the correspondent has been misinformed in regard to the matter. There has been no petition for a road from Mr. Jenkins' place to Sarah lake but there has been three petitions got up first, second and third to run a road beginning at the ¼ section post on the east line of section 27, town 119, R. 24, on Mr. Jenkins north line. The road in question to run due south to the Sarah lake road, and not to Sarah lake, as stated, said road would pass directly through the center of Mr. Jenkins' farm and do great damage to said farm, first petition was rejected for the reason that it was not considered to be to the best interest of the town, second petition was lost for the want of legal signers, third petition I suppose is what he writer refers to in the item of the 20th of January which says that they had a lively discussion, sides being about even for and against the road. I will just say that there was some talk in the regard to the matter finally, it was proposed to take a vote of those present for and against the road, so the chairman of Supervisors, put the vote, and there was six in favor of the road; two supervisors and a stranger, I think from Iowa, and Mr. Bowen and two other gentlemen voting for, on the one side; and seven taxpayers voting against the road on the other side. The proposed road would benefit but very few persons and not be equal to the damages to others. As regards the petition numbered three out of sixteen signers there was probably six that was legal petitioners and a portion of them living out of range of the road, being inconvenient for them to travel it at all. They must be great friends to some one or else enemies to some one else to become so interested. In the last sentance of the item the writer says the Road is to be laid, I would like to know what, on? it is to be laid out. I suppose the number will run up as long as there is any money in it and then be laid out for the benefit of a few; not for the public or town at large regardless of cost or damages.

ALL records are smashed this winter. In the Catskill mountains the cold stopped the clocks; over in Sweden the temperature has been so low as to freeze the mercury, and not long ago a ship arriving in New York reported that the alcohol in the compass had frozen. The worst "old-fashioned winter of our daddies" never knew anything like this.

THE adulteration of baking powder may be detected by a simple experiment. If alum is present in the powder, and this is usually the adulterant used in place of cream of tartar, which is much more expensive, it may be detected by scattering a little of the powder in a glass of cold water. The alum, if present, will sink to the bottom of the glass, a heavy white sediment. The powder containing cream of tartar will produce more foam and not have much sediment.

ONE of the greatest works which the late Phillips Brooks accomplished, says a New York dispatch, was in that city some years ago, when, during the busiest hour of week days, he held service in Trinity church and commanded an audience of business men that filled every portion of it. That is a test of ability which few men can stand, and is to a large extent the measure of a clergyman's usefulness. Such a test requires intellectual and oratorical ability of the highest order, adorned with the spirit and graces of Christianity.

ONE of the most valuable publications ever issued by the government is a report on the sheep industry of the United States prepared under direction of the secretary of agriculture. It treats of the history and conditions of the industry from the early settlement of the country down to the present day and is handsomely illustrated. It bids fair to rival in popularity the work on the diseases of the horse published by the department some time since. It is for distribution by the secretary and through members of congress.

THE Pall Mall Badget tells how the Salvation Army was named. Gen. Booth was preparing his annual appeal for Christmas, 1877, and was pacing the room, discussing the various particulars. Seated at the table were his two aids-de-camp, Mr. Bramwell and Mr. Railton. "What is the Christian mission?" was a question propounded by the circular. To this was proposed the reply: "A volunteer army." Pausing for a moment, and leaning over the shoulder of his secretary, the general picked up a pen, passed it through the word "volunteer," and wrote above it "salvation."

The death of Mr. Blaine brought the business of the house to a sudden termination. A few committee reports were made, including a bill to repeal the federal election laws, and then, after brief and affecting speeches by Mr. Milliken (who represents Mr. Blaine's old district) and Mr. Holman (who served many years with him in the house) out of respect to the memory of the dead statesman the house adjourned.

LATER NEWS.

THE funeral of James G. Blaine occurred the 30th. It was his wish before he died that the funeral should be private, but that was impossible. Every effort was made to comply with his own understood wishes and with the expressed desires of his family in this regard, but the surging wave of public interest swept over the barriers imposed and made his private funeral one of the most impressive of public demonstrations in honor of the dead. The most eminent men in the nation stood around his bier. All business in the nation's capital was suspended during the period when the funeral services were in progress. The presence of the president and cabinet and supreme judges and high officials of congress, and of the diplomatic corps, was not more significant than the homage of the waiting crowds who, in respectful silence, lined the streets through which the funeral cortege passed. It was exactly at 12 o'clock when the slow and solemn organ music announced the arrival of the funeral party at the door of the church. As the sad procession moved up the aisle, Walter Damrosch, Mr. Blaine's son-in-law, who was at the organ, played an improvisation made up of several themes of hymns which Mr. Blaine loved. All present rose and remained standing as the funeral party moved down the aisle. Dr. Hamlin, the pastor, walked at the head of the mourners, reading from the ritual of Presbyterian worship. Behind him came the honorary pall bearers, two abreast, Senators Hale and Frye, the representatives of the dead man's state, leading the way. The body bearers moved at a measured pace toward the chancel rail, where they deposited the casket amid the profusion of flowers. The family followed the body and took the front seat on the left, near the remains. More distant kinsfolk, relatives, intimate friends, the president and his cabinet and other members of the funeral party who were at the house, came in after the family and were seated in the pews reserved for them. When all were seated, the deep peals of the organ ceased and Dr. Hamlin from his place in the pulpit began the church services with the reading of selections from the scriptures. The reading finished, prayer was offered by Dr. Hamlin. At the close of the prayer the funeral procession once more formed and the body was conveyed to Oak Hill cemetery and there laid to rest.

THE Ohio river has broken up and navigation will soon be resumed from the head the Louisville.

BLAINE IS DEAD.

His Death Occurs January 27th at 11 A. M.

Surrounded by His Friends, He Passes Peacefully Away—His Mind Has Been a Blank for Some Time.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 27.—Blaine is dead.

The hour of death was 11 o'clock.

The end came peacefully, the ex-secretary passing from an unconscious state into that of death. His wife and children were at his bedside. An attendant stationed at the door of the mansion to answer the inquiries of the newspaper correspondents made the announcement. Early this morning Dr Hyatt announced that the patient had suffered a relapse and that he did not expect Mr. Blaine could rally.

The news spread to the capitol and throughout the city in a few minutes. It was everywhere expected, but when the announcement came the impression was more striking than any that has been created by similar news since the death of Abraham Lincoln.

His mind has been almost a blank for weeks past, his lucid moments having been but few and at times far between, but his physical frame has withstood the ravages of wasting disease until now.

Dating from the cradle to the tomb, Mr. Blaine's years have been active ones. All the trials and tribulations that fall to the lot of a public man have been his, and have earned for him the peaceful ending of a career which closed when life's candle made its last flicker today.

Mr. Blaine, on his deathbed, was surrounded, just as he had been almost incessantly for weeks, by those who were nearest and dearest to him.

He passed a restless night and this morning was languid and weak, but nothing serious was noted until shortly before 9 o'clock, when a change for the worse occurred.

James G. Blaine was born in West Brownsville, Pa., on the 31st of January, 1830; educated first at home and afterward at Washington college; teaching for a short time in a military school at Blue Lick Springs, Ky.; finding there and taking in marriage Harriet Stanwood, a teacher like himself; returning to his native state to teach in Philadelphia; going with his young wife to her home in Maine and making that state his future home; editor at 24 of the Kenebec Journal; associate editor of the Portland Advertiser; bounding into politics; reaching the legislature of Maine, and in 1862 was elected to congress, where he served consecutively for 14 years. In 1869 he was chosen speaker of that body and was re-elected speaker by the next two congresses.

The house of representatives never had a better or truer speaker. His personality in the desk was immense. As presiding officer he not only won, but merited universal respect. His rulings were impartial. His eye had the glance of the eagle, and his pose and self possession were magnificent. He was capable of justice and truth. He would not brook such infamy as the caucus occasionally propounded. At one time he was well nigh losing the allegiance of his party by a defiant counter ruling in favor of the democracy.

In 1874 the democrats gained control of the house and Mr. Blaine became the leader of the minority. In 1876 he was the most prominent candidate for the presidential nomination. At the convention he only lacked 28 votes of a majority necessary to nominate him, but was defeated by the consolidation of his opponents. Was appointed to the United States senate to fill unexpired term caused by resignation of Senator Morrill. In 1880 he was again a prominent candidate for the presidential nomination. When Garfield was elected he was offered and accepted the state portfolio. Retired from the cabinet December 19, after inaugurating several measures which were calculated to accrue to the benefit of the United States.

Of his nomination for the presidency and defeat in 1884 the world knows. In 1888 he went to Europe in poor health and had an attack of illness while in Florence. Sent two letters from Europe saying he would not be a candidate under any circumstances. Upon the election of General Harrison he again became secretary of state and began to interest himself immediately in the Behring sea and fisheries question with Great Britain and other international affairs, also formulating his reciprocity ideas which were incorporated in the tariff act of 1890, and which led to commercial treaties with several countries. In June, 1892, he resigned as secretary of state and spent the summer at Bar Harbor.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Doings of the State Law Makers at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 24.—Both branches show a determination to get down to the work of the session. While the morning hours were short, the members put in good work in committees. In the senate bills were introduced, appropriating $110,000 for institute for defectives at Faribault; providing that debts not a lien upon property of decedent before death shall not become so after death; an amendment to fish and game laws; appropriating $2,000 additional to normal schools except the one at Moorhead, which is given $1,000; appropriating $45,000 to erect a dormitory at the Moorhead normal school; providing for government of cities and repeal of special laws.

In the house the following bills were sent up: Relating to state national guard, appropriating $1,500 to each company organized and mustered into state service; to provide coats and blankets for state guard; to locate and mark the position of Minnesota troops in battles at Chattanooga and Chickamauga; to regulate the appointment of officers to state institutions; to prevent railroad companies from abandoning any portion of their line or to close or abandon a station; appropriating $43,000 for the St. Cloud normal schools; to protect laboring and material men (makes claims valid against municipal corporations for labor performed or material furnished); to compel railroads to make tickets over their lines good until used; to legalize mortgage foreclosure certificates; relating to powers of district courts over corporations as to removal of their officers; making it a misdemeanor to sell liquor before taking out a license. Adjourned until Wednesday.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 25.—Very brief were the sessions of both houses today. In the senate the following bills were introduced: Relating to changes in the articles of incorporation of corporations; limiting the time for commencing actions on stocks, bonds, etc.; authorizing towns to refund moneys collected on improperly or illegally executed bonds; appropriating $150,000 for the construction of a library at the State University; to provide for three commissioners to consider the matter of taxation and report in January, 1895; to amend the law relating to the issuance of state teachers' certificates; a memorial to congress asking that all anthracite coal lands be condemned and taken possession of by the government. On motion of Senator Donnelly the rules were suspended and the memorial was adopted by an unanimous vote. On invitation of President Northrup, the senate decided to visit the State University Feb. 1.

In the house the following bills were read: To regulate peddlers and peddling; to regulate the practice of veterinary medicine, surgery and dentistry; relating to life insurance companies (they shall make no distinctions as to persons of same age and condition, prohibits any rebates or allowances by agents or companies other than stated in the policies); to provide for county teachers' training schools; to define public school holidays (school months for teachers' contracts are made 20 days of four weeks of five days each, no deduction from teachers' time for holidays); to license peddlers; to legalize certain proceedings of villages to granting franchises to street railway companies.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 26.—There were few bills presented in the senate, but all were important. They were: To place express companies under supervision of the railway commission; relating to the storage and transportation of grain; to insert a long and short haul clause in the transportation laws; to repeal all laws of 1885 and amendatory thereof relating to grain and warehouses. In executive session the nomination of Supt. Kiehle was confirmed.

The house today, for the second time, had up the resolution to make the members an allowance for their expenditures for newspapers and it was again defeated through the lack of the necessary two-thirds vote which it takes to appropriate money. The vote was largely in favor of the resolution, but did not affect the desired result. Mr. Walsh's bill to prohibit indemnity insurance companies from doing business in the state was reported adversely and was only saved from going to the waste basket by the author's appeal to have it considered in the judiciary committee. Mr. Walsh's coal combine investigation resolution came back from the senate with an amendment limiting the expenditure to $500, and Mr. Walsh moved its adoption. There was some opposition to the resolution at first.

Bills were introduced to regulate telephones; to regulate the employment of women and children in factories; to provide for suits for injuries resulting from sale of intoxicants; relating to elevators at terminal points (makes all public warehouses subject to state inspection and requires roads to allow warehouses on tracks and rights of way); to regulate rates of freight on railroads, requiring a horizontal reduction of 25 per cent from published rate sheets. All roads are declared highways and forbidden to make any discrimination.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 27.—The house made an all day of the session. Among new bills introduced were two for school text books, one from Mr. Turrell, of Redwood, and one from Cairns, of Hennepin. Mr. Young, of Waseca, introduced a bill forfeiting the lands and franchises of the Hastings & Dakota Railroad. The house ended in special order, the election "contest," so called, of Biddemann vs. Henrichs, for one of the Hennepin districts. It also once again knocked out the postage stamp $10, and on the calendar defeated the Hopkins bill, which amended the liquor license law.

In both houses notice was taken of the death of Hon. James G. Blaine and a joint committee named to draft a memorial.

In the senate a few bills were introduced, but the most of the morning session was consumed in a debate of the World's Fair additional appropriation of $100,000. The bill was reached in committee of the whole, and there was a warm and lengthy discussion. At the afternoon session it was recommended to pass after a breezy debate, in which John Day Smith and Ignatius Donnelly locked horns. The debate was the liveliest of the session.

Adjourned until Monday afternoon.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 30.—The legislature transacted no business today out of respect to the memory of James G. Blaine, but both houses met in joint session at 4:15 in the afternoon and listened to the report of the joint committee appointed to draft resolutions.

The resolutions were read, but not adopted until several of the members of the legislature had taken the opportunity to pay tribute to the great ability and other characteristics of the deceased.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Good Roads.

The good roads convention met at the state capitol and a general discussion of the condition of roads in the state, with some suggestions from Mr. Sneider of Ramsey county, who thought roads should be improved under contract by the direction of the county surveyor.

Mr. Farnham of Wright county argued for the repeal of the poll tax law, the present laws and poor overseers he thought were responsible for the present condition. He cited instances of roads in his county which had been put in fine condition at a cost of $300 a mile.

Gen. Andrews thought that if Canada could build macadamized roads, that the United States can. He said the cost of such roads in Victoria was from $3,000 to $5,000 per mile. H. S. Fairchild took issue with Gen. Andrews and said that in New Jersey it cost $10,000 a mile to macadamize roads, and it cost $20,000 here. He was in favor of using material near at hand, such as gravel, etc.

Mr. Hagan of McLeod county suggested the employment of convict labor. Mr. Tollman of Chisago presented a resolution abolishing poll tax and substituting an annual tax of $1, prohibiting anyone from voting unless a tax receipt could be shown.

E. J. Hodgson read a paper on "State Good Roads Association and Needs of Such Organization," in which he made many valuable suggestions.

Rufus Cookee, a civil engineer of note, read an address on "Stone Roads—the Two Systems, Telford and Macadam Compared; Common Gravel Roads; Foundation Mineral for Wearing Surface."

The convention elected the following officers for the Minnesota State Road Improvement association: President, A. B. Choate, Minneapolis; treasurer, E. J. Hodgson, St. Paul; secretary, F. L. Foxsie, St. Paul. Directors:

Clay—Andrew Cragness, Moorhead.
Carleton—W. R. Mayer, Carleton.

Meeker—James Madigan, Mannanah.
Mower—C. S. Hoppe, Dexter.
Norman—Wesley Jenkins, Ada.

Scott—Casper Roderig, Jordan.
Waseca—Dr. D. S. Cummings, Waseca.
Wadena—H. W. Fuller, Wadena.
Winona—J. T. Wilson, Winona.
Washington—William Armstrong, Oakdale.

The following resolutions were adopted:

1. All highway tax should be paid in money, and poll tax abolished.

2. Township road districts should be abolished, and the highway taxes expended under the direction of the board of township supervisors who shall be elected for three years, one each year.

3. Each township should raise not less than a 2 mill tax, and no greater than a 20 mill tax in any one year.

4. All bridges costing $100 or more should be county bridges, erected under the direction of the county board, but kept in repair by the townships, and the cost of such repairs refunded to the towns by the county.

5. The system of assessing the cost of highways upon the benefited property holders has been successfully adopted, and in many counties of this state there is a strong sentiment in favor of applying this principle in the making of county roads. We therefore favor such changes in our constitution and bylaws as will permit the people of any county, city or township, by a majority vote, to adopt this plan of assessment against beneficiaries, provided that no assessment shall be in excess of the actual benefits conferred.

6. The exemption of unused railroad lands from taxation is in many counties the greatest hindrance to good roads.

We therefore demand such change in our laws as will subject all such land to taxation. We also demand that all railroad land be subject to special assessment for streets, roads and other purposes, the same as on other lands wherever such policy of special assessment may be adopted.

7. All swamp lands with the state not appropriated to corporations and earned by them should be sold or leased by the state, the proceeds thereof used in building public roads.

8. All roads that have been hereafter constructed shall be used for a period of five years shall be considered prima facie as legal roads with a right of way two rods wide each side from the center of the track. No legal road shall be vacated by the supervisor of any town, until the matter has been acted upon by the board in two successive years. Before the town supervisor shall file the final order laying out a public road, the county attorney shall examine the proceedings and records and report the same to be correct and legal, and it shall be the duty of county attorneys to perform such duties then we recommend that the existing law be so amended that a petition signed by the owners of two-thirds of the property abutting a proposed road shall give the town supervisors jurisdiction to lay, cut, change and open roads as is now given by a petition of resident fee holders.

9. We recommend that the supervisors be authorized to grant each person having in their respective towns a rebate of $2.50 per annum for the term of four years for each wagon, and by him throughout each year, and having four-inch tires or wider, and after 1898 no traffic wagon shall be permitted on public roads with less than four-inch tires.

Resolved, That the legislature be asked to make an appropriation to have 50,000 copies of the proceedings of the good roads convention printed in pamphlet form and distributed throughout the state.

A Tough Citizen.

Ed Murray, of East Prairie, went to the residence of Patrick Lynch, at Owatonna, and tried to force Miss Ella Lynch, with whom he was in love, to elope with him. She refused to go, whereupon he choked her and forced her to put on her wraps. She got to the entter when Murray said, "Get in or I will shoot you." She made a desperate run for life of a half block away from him and fell in a faint in front of the home of O. S. Boice. Kind hands carried her in the house, where she still lies in a critical condition. Murray was arrested.

An Expert's Opinion.

Our readers have doubtless noticed the numerous discussions by the scientists and hygienists as to the relative value of the various baking powders. A careful sifting of the evidence leaves no doubt as to the superiority of the Royal Baking Powder in purity, wholesomeness and strength, from a scientific standpoint. An opinion, however, that will have perhaps greater influence with our practical housekeepers, is that given by Marion Harland, the well-known and popular writer, upon matters pertaining to the science of domestic economy, of housekeeping, and of home cooking. In a letter published in the Philadelphia Ladies' Home Journal, this writer says:

"I regard the Royal Baking Powder as the best manufactured and in the market, so far as I have any experience in the use of such compounds. Since the introduction of it into my kitchen, I have used no other in making biscuits, cakes, etc., and have entirely discarded for such purposes the home-made combination of one-third soda, two-thirds cream of tartar.

"Every box has been in perfect condition when it came into my hands, and the contents have given complete satisfaction. It is an act of simple justice, and also a pleasure, to recommend it unqualifiedly to American housewives.

None But Royal

BAKING POWDER is absolutely pure. No other equals it, or approaches it in leavening strength, purity, or wholesomeness. (See U. S. Gov't Reports.) No other is made from cream of tartar specially refined for it and chemically pure. No other makes such light, sweet, finely-flavored, and wholesome food. No other will maintain its strength without loss until used, or will make bread or cake that will keep fresh so long, or that can be eaten hot with impunity, even by dyspeptics. No other is so economical.

The Baking Powders now being offered in this vicinity, with the statement that they are "as good as Royal," have been shown by the official analyses to be composed of alum and detrimental to health.

The official chemists of the United States and Canada, State analysts, municipal boards of health, and physicians indorse the great qualities of the Royal Baking Powder.

THE WIZARD'S CHARM.

How Gustavus Found a Pretty Wife with It.

IN a pretty chalet that nestled high against the shaggy breast of Mount Obgadin lived the Widow Neur and her daughter Marie. A lonely home you would have thought it, but the fir trees that wailed so in your ears whispered good cheer to Marie.

Very lovely was the little Swiss maid, with violet eyes that now danced and sparkled and then grew soft and tender as a little child. Two rose-red lips shut in her pearly teeth and when she smiled a tiny dimple danced for a moment on her peachy cheek. Her hair clung in caressing curls around her low white forehead and fell in ripples of golden sunshine far below her slender waist.

And her voice! Ah! that was Marie's greatest charm. Soft and clear, not a discordant note marred its sweet, pure harmony.

Sometimes as she sang at her evening devotions the herdsmen far below in the valley, catching faint notes of her song, looked up and crossed themselves, half believing they heard the echo of an angel choir.

But very few knew of Marie's beauty. For when she went with her mother on one of her rare visits to the hamlet below she brushed her wavy hair straight and smooth back from her forehead and braided it in long stiff plaits which fell down her back.

And her sweet voice, frightened at its own sound so far from home, grew faint and husky, until, in this shrinking, sober damsel, walking so timidly beside the Widow Neur, you would have found it hard to recognize the beautiful Marie of the mountain.

So it happened that only her mother and one other person knew how good and sweet and how fair Marie was.

The other was a stranger who came from a far-away country and spent his summers in a little house on the mountain's very top.

The simple villagers called him "the wizard," and told strange tales of how he spent whole nights gazing at the heavens through a long tube; that he could foretell to an hour when the sun would cover itself with darkness.

But, strangest of all, he had a little wire stretched for miles over hills and valleys to the great city! This wire talked to him in a queer language which no one else could understand.

Marie did not know how wise the wizard was when he came to her home one morning and asked for a drink of water.

He followed her to the spring when she went for it and stopped by the way to break open a curious stone. He showed Marie how queerly marked it was inside and then told her a story about it.

The usually timid maiden was so interested she forgot to be frightened, and thus a strong friendship between the two was begun.

After this the wizard came often to the widow's chalet for rest and refreshment on his long rambles, and long before the first summer was ended the stranger knew that no girl in all the canton could be compared with Marie.

On the other side of the mountain from the Widow Neur's home lived another widow. She, too, had but one child, a son, who was the pride and delight of her life. This was the brave young hunter and guide, Gustavus Friel.

Gustavus cared little for the Obgadin maidens. He would far rather chase the chamois up the mountain side or guide travelers through its dangerous passes than spend his time with the finest of the maids of the hamlet.

His mother often said: "My son, when wilt thou bring me home a daughter and thyself a wife?"

And Gustavus, smiling and pressing a kiss on her forehead, would answer: "When I find a maid as good as thee, mother; but I want no idle, shrill-voiced wife to disturb our quiet home."

But one day his mother said more sadly and seriously than ever before:

"Gustavus, I am growing old and feeble. I can no longer make and mend thy clothes and keep our home. Thou must have a wife. Promise me at the fete next week thou wilt choose one from among the maidens there."

Gustavus reluctantly gave her the desired promise, but it weighed heavily upon him.

At last he seized his gun and went out on the mountain, but the perplexing question followed him, until in despair he threw himself on the ground groaning:

"Oh, that some wise man would make this choice for me!"

A moment after he looked up and saw, as if to answer his wish, the wizard approaching him.

"Why," he exclaimed to himself, "did I not think of him before? Surely he if anyone can help me."

The wizard greeted Gustavus warmly, for he felt a strong friendship for the young guide who had taken him safely through many a dangerous mountain excursion.

"CANST THOU NOT HELP ME?"

And now his sympathetic question: "Why, what's troubling you, my boy?" opened the way for Gustavus to pour out all his perplexity, ending his recital with the question:

"Canst thou not help me choose a good wife, who will make my life happy? For now I have given my mother my promise to find a wife at the fete next week."

The wizard smiled sympathetically and then thought in silence a little before he answered:

"If a pure, true heart is united to a pure, true heart, both lives must be happy."

"Alas!" answered Gustavus, "but I know not which maiden among them all has the purest, truest heart!"

"There will be one such heart at the fete," answered the wizard; "but you may fail to recognize it. However, if you will come to me to-morrow I will give you a charm that will show you this heart."

Left alone the wizard continued down the mountain side until he came in sight of the Widow Neur's chalet, where he found Marie sitting by the spring. Instead of her usual sunshiny smile, tiny teardrops stood in her eyes and there was a grieved look about her rosy lips that made him wish to comfort her.

"What is the matter, little one?" he asked gently.

"Oh, sir," she said, "I want to see the great fete next week, but I have no pretty ornaments to wear, and then the good mother says none of the young men will care to dance with me."

"But why?" asked the wizard in surprise.

"Because I cannot talk and laugh with them as other maidens do. My heart beats fast if they do but glance toward me and I know not what to say, and so and so"—here a tear slipped from under the long eyelashes—"my mother says I had better not go."

"Courage, little one," the wizard answered. "Tell your mother," he added suddenly, "that I am going to lend you a silver belt to wear and that my knowledge tells me that the bravest, handsomest youth in all the land will dance with you."

The happy Marie thanked the wizard as Gustavus had done and ran off to tell the wonderful news to her mother.

Early next morning Gustavus went for his charm. He found the wizard waiting for him, and taking him into his strange room, the wise man said, smiling, as he had the day before, half quizzically, half sympathetically:

"Here's the charm, my good fellow. You see it is a magic ring. Put it on before you go to the fete, and be sure

"MARIE, WILT THOU DANCE WITH ME?"

you dance with every maiden there. When you place your arm around the waist of the one whose heart is true and good a strange feeling will run through you and your hand will cling to her. But you must be sure you dance with all."

It was a curious circlet of iron, and with a flat extension, which the wizard bade him wear pointing toward his palm.

When the fete day came Gustavus was there among the other young men, eager to try his charm.

All the maidens of Obgadin canton were there also, and on the outskirts of one of the gay crowds little Marie hovered timidly beside her mother.

Marie nestled closely to her mother's side, and as the hours fled and no youth asked her to dance her head dropped lower and lower, and she wondered if the wise man had made a mistake.

In the meantime Gustavus danced with one after another of the maids, but though he watched with intense eagerness not once did he feel the strange thrill for which he waited.

"I have danced with them all," he said at last to himself, "except that shy one over there; surely she is not the girl! But as I have promised to dance with them all I will try her too."

He asked her name of one of the girls, and then going to her said simply:

"Marie, wilt thou dance with me?"

Astonishment and delight made Marie for a moment forget her shyness. The wizard's words had come true.

As he placed his arm around her his hand touched her shining belt.

Instantly a strange thrill ran through them both, and Gustavus' arm seemed to cling to Marie's waist.

"Marie, didst thou feel that?" he cried, earnestly.

And Marie smilingly answered: "Yes."

So they began dancing, and as they danced it seemed to those watching them that a wonderful transformation came over Marie.

Her hair, shaken loose from its long, stiff braids, hung like a glittering golden veil all around her; her beautiful eyes shone like stars and the dimpled cheeks and pearly teeth formed a fit hiding place for her laughing voice that now and then rang sweet and clear from her rosy lips. Not one of the village maidens was half so fair as she!

"Surely," said the amazed villagers, "there was never such a handsome couple."

"But is not Marie under a charm?" cried others. "She has suddenly grown so lovely."

But the Widow Neur smiled to herself and said:

"Love's witchery, if it is true and pure, will transform all of us and bring out all that is loveliest and best within us."

When M. le Wizard returned to Paris that winter he read a scientific paper before the savants of the academy.

In it he detailed many of his wonderful discoveries and his work during the summer.

But he did not speak of the most interesting of all—how, by the aid of a little magnet concealed in a steel belt and a rude ring, he had brought together two loving hearts, and by so doing had caught some of the happiness of paradise and imprisoned it in a chalet on old Obgadin mountain.—Anna Siviter, in Short Stories.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Fritters: One cup new milk, three eggs, pinch of salt, and flour sufficient to make a stiff batter.—Detroit Free Press.

—Cockroaches may be easily destroyed by using smooth china bowls partially filled with molasses and water. Set the bowls against something by which the insects can get in; they will not be able to get out.

—Spice Cake: One cupful of brown sugar, one cupful of good molasses, one cupful of butter, one cuptul of sweet milk, one teaspooful each powdered cinnamon, nutmeg and cloves, three eggs well beaten, four small cupfuls of flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder sifted with it. Stir all well together and bake slowly in a moderate oven.—Ohio Farmer.

—Pot Pie: Cut veal, beef or chicken into pieces, and put into boiling water enough to cover, with two slices of bacon; cover closely, and boil an hour, and season to taste; make a batter of two well-beaten eggs, two cups of milk, teaspoonful of baking powder and flour, drop in separate teaspoonfuls while boiling, and cook five minutes; serve immediately.—Boston Budget.

—To Clean a Brussels Carpet: First, have the carpet well shaken, then tack it down in a room where it is to remain, and sweep it as thoroughly as possible. Take a pail of hot water, put in two tablespoonfuls of powdered borax; wash the carpet all over the surface, using a flannel cloth. For grease spots or very dirty places, use a scrubbing brush freely, and a very little soap, taking care to rinse the soap off well after scrubbing. Change the water quite often. Rub the carpet well after washing with a dry cloth, and open the doors and windows so as to dry it as quickly as possible.—Good Housekeeping.

—Oyster Pates: Drain two dozen large oysters and chop medium fine. Chop half a pint of canned mushrooms and mix with the oysters. Bring to the boiling point a mixture of half a pint of cream and the same amount of the juice of mushrooms, thicken with a tablespoonful of flour, rubbed smooth in a little cold milk, and season with salt, white pepper, a trifle of cayenne and a tablespoonful of lemon juice. When this boils smooth, add the well-beaten yolks of two eggs, and the oysters and mushrooms. Have ready some shapes of pastry baked in pate pans, slip them out on a shallow bake-pan, fill with the mixture and set in the oven two minutes.—N. Y. Observer.

—Potato Croquettes: Potatoes neatly made into the shape of croquettes form an elegant accompaniment for chops, tongue or any light dish of meat. If desired to serve alone, a little finely-chopped meat may be incorporated; chicken or ham or a mixture of both is good, and a little fine corned beef is by no means to be despised when taken in this form. A spoonful of thyme or sweet marjoram rubbed to a powder, or a little chopped parsley may be used for flavoring. Season highly and beat the ingredients together until the whole is light and creamy. Shape the croquettes nicely, about two and a half inches long by one in diameter; dip in eggs and crumbs and fry carefully. A piece of onion fried in the lard before the croquettes helps to flavor.—Country Gentleman.

Corner Catchall.

A very pretty catchall can be made out of a large, coarse, summer hat worn by boys, and which in this locality are called "straw piles." Fold the two edges together and make the hat flat, so that it will resemble a long, uneven triangle. Stitch the two edges of the brim together, then bring the doubled sides around and catch together to form a funnel-shaped bag, placing the stitching at the back. Ornament with loops of red satin ribbon, sewed at each side for hangers, and in the front place a bouquet of red paper poppies interspersed with Italian oats, such as can be bought of any florist who keeps supplies, tied with a bit of satin ribbon. Other flowers and other colored ribbon may be used, white satin ribbons and daisies and oats being a pretty and delicate-looking combination. Blue ribbons, blue morning glories and oats are also pretty, and so are yellow ribbons, little sunflowers and dried grasses. Or green ribbons may be used, with dried grasses mixed with green paper clovers.—Detroit Free Press.

Early Training of Children.

Physiology teaches that during infancy, when the acquirements of talking and walking are gained, the first necessity of childhood is growth of the body and its muscles, and that if any attempt be made to foster activity of the brain and a child becomes in consequence precociously clever in talking earlier than usual or in any other thing, requiring exercise of the mind, it is certain to be done at the expense and not infrequently to the irretrievable injury of the body, which in a short time becomes comparatively puny and weak. Such early forcing is good for neither body nor brain. At the same time it may be noted that oftentimes children show remarkable backwardness in talking who can walk well. In fact, the more intelligent a child is the less he uses words because he only learns words in proportion as he gains ideas about objects. With children of little intelligence, but who are gifted with flexible organs and with a memory in advance of their judgment, words precede ideas and often take their place.—Chicago Herald.

Starving Our Children.

When we see our house plants looking stunted, putting forth few leaves and no flowers, we stir the soil in the pots and enrich the earth. When we see a child looking pale and thin, we say, if we know something of physiological chemistry: "Too little nitrogenous food." If we are simple folk, averse to long words, we remark: "That child seems half starved." It is the truth, however we express it, and a wrong is being done to the child that the fact is not recognized and remedied by whoever has the daily oversight of its meals. The unconscious victim may seem to eat a sufficient amount of food, while it does not get enough of the proper kind to furnish the nourishment the body requires.—Ladies' Home Journal

If Checkmated Early,

Rheumatism is shorn of its terrors. When it is young, annihilate it with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters and prevent life-long torture. If it is chronic, it is always liable to attack the heart with a fatal result. The poisons taken to cure it simply alleviate its pangs, and are themselves dangerous in a slight overdose. Indigestion, liver or kidney trouble, costiveness, malaria and loss of appetite and flesh are remedied by the Bitters.

DELANO DIARY

—Fresh Oysters at C. H. Green & Co's Grocery.

—The Church sociable was unavoidably postponed on account of the inclemency of the weather, Tuesday evening.

—The flags in town were hoisted to half mast, on Saturday in honor of James G. Blaine whose death occurred the day before.

—Tuesday was one of the stormiest days of the season. In the morning a regular old fashioned blizzard set in with daylight and continued for the day.

—The 5:23 a. m. train on the G. N. did not arrive here from the west on Wednesday, until 3:15 p. m., on accounts of the blizzard. The morning train from the east was on time.

—Mayor Coolen thinks had he been going into the "commisary" car for "schnaps" or a cigar instead of watching a game of poker, that was never finished, he might now be on the other side of the river.

—Quite a few are on the sick list this week Mrs. Cal. Stewart has the pneumonia at her son-in-law, William Murphy's; Mrs. T. Rader, the typhoid fever, at Ennis Brandon's; Richard Dunn's oldest daughter has winter cholera; and John Rader's youngest children have been sick; one with pleurisy, the other with a nervous affection, while M'Liss has had a sore throat.

—A jack rabbit looks pretty big about 10 p. m., by moonlight as it clinks it over the snow, a few rods from the road,—at least it did last Monday evening,—this from experience. And they are terribly swift on foot,—at least on Sunday evening, a week ago—this from the experience of several of our local nimrods with their fleetest hounds,—too fast altogether for Delano sports.

—Notwithstanding the large expenditure being made by our State for World's Fair purposes Mayor Coolen informs us he spent six hours in Chicago, a few days ago with a guide to show him around and did not see the Minnesota display. It seems as if the guide ought to be able to find a display of $150,000, and shows it up to a Minnesotian when he comes to the World's Fair, especially to the Mayor.

—Mr. C. S. Doyen, of Elk River, formerly from "Down East," while in conversation at the hotel one day, this week remarked that he had a memento of which he thought a great deal and which he is carefully preserving. It is the autograph of the great American poet, John G. Whittier. The two men were neighbors, and Mr. D. says he was a shoemaker in a small way in the village and was offered quite a lucrative position, as marker of goods, in a large establishment, but owing to his inability to make handsome enough figures could not fill the place, (his wife afterwards obtained the situation) while lamenting his misfortune Mr. Whittier came in, and on being informed of the circumstances asked "Let me see thee write thy name," and after Mr. D. had done so he took the pen and on a very light piece of tissue paper, that was on the counter, wrote his own name in a good plain hand. Mr. Doyen claims to be the subject of the poem "The shoemaker" by the same great poet.

—We had the pleasure of attending the afternoon session of the Teachers' meeting at the school house on Saturday and was pleased. The attendance was good. The lecture on Physical Culture, by Miss Emma Allen, was fine. While Prof Dewey did well in opening for discussion the subject of Reading and Elocution, which, however soon ran into a lively squabble as to the cause of so much tardiness, especially in village schools. Mrs. Lindsley gave some pointers on writing. Mr. Corey, on Temperance Hygiene; Miss Cheeley, on Primary work. Mrs. Beede, of Rockford, Messrs. Sage, Belden and Miss Quinn. All the Delano teachers and Superintendent Lindsley participated in the discussions on the various topics coming before the society. Mr. Lindsley suggested that steps be taken to send an exhibition of Wright county school work to the World's Fair. He thought about $100. would make a fair display. This is to be used for binding and other necessary purposes. But as he once furnished the county with about that amount of school registers for which he got little thanks he would prefer to see where this is to come from before he starts in. A vote was taken an having two days examinations for teachers certificates instead of one day as at present. The vote stood. For two days, 9. For one day, 7.

Come out to-night, singly or by the pair; Sociable, at the home of O'Hair.

—St. Valentine's Day will be observed by a Musical and Dramatic entertainment in the city hall. See add.

—James Danforth is reported to have dumped a traveling man in the snow about half a dozen times between Delano and Watertown.

—The Eagle buries that poor man in another graveyard this week without digging him up from where they buried him last week. It is a shame to do things so.

—On the inside of this paper see an account of the Good Roads convention recently held in St. Paul. The doings of the legislature, and an article on the death of James G. Blaine.

—If the principals of the Delano and Rockford schools see fit to hire halls and get up spelling schools charging 10 cts admission the profits to go to buying a public library they have that privilege. If the Eagle wants one free let her have it.

—Tuesday night was the coldest of the season. A. W. Wittman's government thermometer registering 31½ deg. which beats the cold spell of a short time ago by ½ of a degree. The stiff northwester added snap to the bracing atmosphere.

—On Sunday evening about two dozen young people from the Rader settlement rigged up a four horse team and drove to Delano and attended church. This shows a spirit of enterprise, and was pleasing to all; especially the minister who, but for the timely appearance of those and others from abroad, would have been greeted by rather a small crowd on this occasion.

—Our Mayor, Coolen, has returned from Chicago. He has passed through a wreck on the R. R. and come out unscratched. We understand he says he passed into a non-smoker car and remained for a while at which time the wreck occurred. Had he been indulging in a flagrant Havanna possibly we would have been minus a mayor. As it is John looks well, and thankful.

—The spelling school held at Rockford, on Friday evening last and participated in by about fifty of the Delano pupils and the Rockford school was a grand success. The weather was fine, the sleighing good, and the trip enjoyed by those from here, especially when they were successful in carrying off the palm of victory. Two best out of three was the programme, and as Delano took the two first there was no occasion for a third trial. The Rockford school will come here next week and try again. The result of these contests will be some good spellers in this part of the country.

—One of our readers called in on Tuesday, during the blizzard, and handed us an article bearing on the reputation, already established, for truth and veracity, of our neighbor up street, and which must about finish her record. Admitting that it is a pretty hard matter to get everything absolutely correct in the way of news, we must say, for one who has in the past, and recently, made such boasts and brags as to having more news from Buffalo than the Buffalo Journal, and more Monticello news than the Times, that if the news from those places is as true as our correspondent claims in this instance, it were better to have less of it.

—Tradition has handed down through the dim vista of the past that upon a certain day in February, supposed at this time by most of our citizens to be February 2, the ground-hog is want to venture forth from the hole where he has been hibernating for the past stormy days of a rigorous winter. And, in case he sees his shadow he goes back into winter quarters for another long six weeks of rest. But in case no shadow can be seen he remains above ground to enjoy the pleasant weather which is to follow. Thursday was the 24 and as the sun did not show itself, no shadow was thrown consequently tradition says we will have six weeks of fine weather. Let us see how tradition will "pan out."

—But a few weeks and our village election will occur. It is about time to be looking things up, and finding out who will accept and who will make good officers. Don't pay any attention to the Eagle's rantings on the subject, whatever. She has lately been saying something about the present incumbents, as usual not very complimentary. It will be remembered that last spring after the regular Democratic ticket failed of an election by one man being defeated by the narrow majority of 5, by an independent candidate put up by a clique for the purpose, the Eagle openly claimed that the council was a "Gutzwiller" council and subsequent events have, partially at least, substantiated the claim. These facts leads people to be suspicious of the s-c-r-e-e-c-h-e-s of the old bird and to think that she feels the loss of her former prestige in village affairs and belittles people for the purpose of throwing voters off their guard, and perhaps succeed in re-electing a portion of the old with her selection of new members. Be on your guard. Be on hand at the caucuses and help select fit men for the positions.

Charles Michaelis, of Buffalo, was in town on business on Saturday.

Will Jacobs drove to St. Michael's Station, with a "Drummer" on Tuesday, in the blizzard.

Rev. and Mrs. Davies are at Forest City this week, assisting Rev. Fairbanks in revival work.

J. D. Young, and a traveling man, started out for a two days trip on Tuesday but soon concluded to come home and wait until after the storm.

County Cullings.

Among the names of those in the senate voting for the $100,000 additional to the World's Fair fund appears that of our own Senator A. Y. Eaton.

Last fall there was some talk of a Wright county press association, which might be made both pleasant and profitable for the county publishers. Will the brethren express themselves upon this subject.—Cokato Commoner.

We agree with Editor Roll and think a coming together of the newspaper men might result in mutual good, as well as benefit their readers.

Village and township elections will be held in a few weeks. Be on your guard and don't allow our Republican friends to rule the country, while you sit idly by and take no hand in affairs. It is your duty as an American citizen to cast your ballot for the right every time opportunity presents itself. Elect good men to office, remembering that not all the good men are in the Republican party.

The Teachers' meetings being held in Wright county are becoming quite interesting, and with a little more pains on the part of the committee on programme to have those who are to take part, notified of that fact, in time to prepare; or, a thorough preparation on all subjects, by the teachers, which would be better, so that they may talk on them at a moments warning, they will become still more so, and more instructive.

Washington's birthday, Feb. 22, will soon be upon us. This is the day set apart by our old settlers on which to assemble at our county seat and talk over "old times." Several enjoyable occasions of this kind have been participated in by some of them. Many have become too feeble to venture out in the cold Minnesota storms which they have faced before; others have been laid away in the silent tomb while their spirits have winged their way to join the innumerable hosts who are waiting on the other shore for those to follow, but enough will doubtless be at Buffalo, on the 22d, to re-call the pioneer days of Wright county, and have an enjoyable time.

Among Our Exchanges.

Representative in congress O. M. Hall, of Red Wing, is urged by many Scandinavian newspapers of this state for the position of United States minister to Stockholm, Sweden. A better selection could not made by President Cleveland. Goodhue county in which Congressman Hall resides, is largely populated by Swedes, Norwegians and Danes, all of whom know and respect Mr. Hall, while his associations with leading business men of those nationalities caused him to be well posted as to their habits, needs and wishes. We have known Mr. Hall from the time he was studying law and can truthfully say that he is not only an honest but an honorable gentleman who will honor any position to which he may be chosen whether at home or abroad and if he desires this position his intelligence, honesty and democracy entitle him to consideration at the hands of the coming executive.—Wabasha Democrat.

It is early yet to name candidates for the U. S. senate from Minnesota to succeed Washburn, but it is not too early for the people outside of the twin cities, whether they be democrats, or republicans, to be looking around for a suitable man to represent them from the country.—Wright county Times.

The Correct News of the Eagle

In reporting the death of J. B., of Rockford town the bird has one thing correct only, and that is that J. B. is dead. Otherwise there is not a word of truth about the report. J. B. died on Friday and not on Saturday, as the Eagle has it. J. B. left one an adopted child, behind, and not a large family of grown up children, as the Eagle has it. J. B. was buried in the German Lutheran cemetery near Crawford's Lake and not in the Siebel cemetery as the Eagle brings it, and Rev. Lahme, the Lutheran minister officated and not R. Ruhle, (who is a Methodist,) as the Eagle has it. Great news gatherer the Eagle, so correct.

FOR THE TRUTH.

DAVENPORT, Io., Jan. 30.—Charles Rapp and Lewis Franklin, a traveling man, were found dead this morning in the room of the former. A gas pipe had brust, and the two deaths had resulted from asphyxiation. Four other persons occupying adjoining rooms were discovered insensible, but they are now out of danger.—St. Paul Globe.

The Drummer and His Grip.

For the Druggist.

Though the rain and sleet are falling;
And the roads are "awful muddy;"
Though all men, "hard times" are bawling.
Though a fellow's nose gets ruddy,
Though the rivers may be frozen,
And the frost may bite and nip,
You can never stop the advent
Of the Drummer and his Grip.

Though the trains may all be smashing.
Though the horses all go lame,
The Drummer like the bed-bug,
"Will get there just the same;"
And when his time is over.
Will come smiling from his trip,
For he always "makes connections,"
Does the Drummer and his Grip.

Ah, he teaches us a lesson,
With his energy and grit;
Things that "paralyze" most people,
Don't astonish him a bit;
And he's ever bright and cheerful.
And a smile is on his lips:
"He's a daisy from away-back,"
Is the Drummer with his Grip.

Have a kind word for him always,
He'll give you back the same,
For the doings of one "black sheep,"
Don't give the whole tribe blame;
Away down deep in hades,
Some so-called good men slip,
While along the road to heaven,
Goes the Drummer (with his Grip.)

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

"THE PRETTY GIRL."

We had such fun on Valentine's Day
With the little girls who live over the way!
Teddy and I, and Jed and Joe,
Picked out the prettiest girls, you know.
And wrote 'em things about "Violets blue,
And sugar is sweet, and so are you."
And, only that Bobby said it was mean,
I wanted to write, "The grass is green,
And so are you," and send it out
To a girl we fellers don't care about.

But Bobby, he's queer, and doesn't go
For fun like the rest of us chaps, you know.
Why, whom do you think he chose to be
His Valentine? Now, if I'd been he,
I'd rather have chosen—never mind;
I'll tell you about it, and you will find
That if ever you want a fellow that's queer,
You'll get him in Bobby, never you fear.

You see, we boys had all picked out,
As I told you, the prettiest girls about;
But Bob, he said there wasn't a girl
As pretty as his, and there wasn't a curl
On any girl's head that could half compare
With his chosen Valentine's soft, fine hair;
And he said her eyes were a whole lot bluer
Than any skies, and double the truer;
And that he was going to be her knight,
And take care of her always, with main and might.

He wouldn't tell us his Valentine's name
Till the regular day for Valentine came,
And mamma had hers, and sister, you know
(Of course from papa, and sister's beau,)
Then Bob, he told us to come ahead,
And he'd prove the truth of all he had said,
And where do you think he took us boys,
Hushing us up at the least noise,
And making us promise not to laugh,
Nor quizz him, nor give him any chaff?
Why he opened grandmamma's door. "See there!"
He said.

It was grandmamma, I declare!
Grandmamma sitting and knitting away,
Sweet grandmamma, with her hair so gray,
Lying all soft on her forehead in curls
Just as pretty as any girl's
And I never had noticed before how blue
Were grandmamma's Eyes. It was really true
As Bobby had said, that there never were skies
One bit bluer than grandmamma's eyes.

So she was his Valentine, he was her knight,
And somehow we all thought Bobby was right
"Dear grandma's the 'prettiest girl,' you see:
Of course I chose her instead of mamma,
For she, you know, belongs to papa:
But grandpa's in heaven, and so I knew
That grandma must be my Valentine true"
—Mary D. Brine, in Harper's Young People.

MRS. WHITNEY, wife of the Ex-Secretary of the Navy, died at her home in New York, on Feb. 5, of heart disease.

JUDGE GRESHAM is said to be booked for Secretary of State. The judge is a man of broad views and wide experience and would, doubtless fill the office creditably.

AN extra session of Congress is almost sure to be called soon after the adjournment of the present session. The business of the country demands it, and the Democrats must begin early to discharge their objection.

THE County Insane Asylum at Dover, N. H. burned last night, roasting in their cells 44 of the 48 inmates, who refused to come out after the doors were opened. This recalls to mind the asylum fire at St. Peter a few years ago where a number lost their lives.

THOMAS WILSON, of Winona, is mentioned as a probable appointee, of the incoming President to position in the cabinet or on the Supreme Court bench. Mr. W. would make an able advisor in the cabinet, or he would honestly administer the law, as a member of the Supreme Court of the United States. The appointment of Thomas Wilson to either position would please the average Minnesotian, highly.

Tariff Pictures.

British plumbers make $7 90 a week. In New York plumbers earn $16

a week, according to official reports. How many plumbers voted to bring the British wage rate to this country by voting for Cleveland last November?—New York Press.

It is fair to presume that Grover Cleveland received his share of plumber's votes; and that they did not expect to reduce their wages by electing him. If their is so great a difference in favor of American wages as the Press stated there is, and which difference it attributes to the McKinley bill, is not that a great incentive to the British plumber to move over here, and when enough of them have left British soil and come to this wouldn't the tables be turned so for as wages go?

Compulsory Education.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 1.—The house of representatives of the Illinois legislature to-day passed the bill repealing the compulsory school law by a vote of 115 yeas and 11 nays. Many republicans voted for the repeal. The senate unanimously adopted a similar bill.—St. Paul Globe.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 3, 1893

Hon. Don M. Dickinson, who is regarded as President-elect Cleveland's personal representative, is in Washington working in the interest of the Andrew bill for the repeal of the Sherman silver law, which is to be taken up in the House on Thursday and Friday, next. Mr. Dickinson is outspoken in favor of the annexation of Hawaii, and in this he is in line with seven-tenths of Congress, without regard to politics. The Hawaiian commissioners arrived today and tomorrow they will present their petition for annexation.

There are so many complications that would have to be met if an act of Congress annexing Hawaii is to be passed, and in the course of the delay, which would necessarily ensue, some foreign Government might, by a revolution or other means, secure control of the country, that it is probable that the ontcome will be the adoption of some quicker method of asserting American control and warning foreign Governments to keep their hands off. There is no politics in this, simply Americanism, and, be it said to his credit, Mr. Harrison has consulted as freely with the prominent democrats in Congress as with members of his own party.

Notwithstanding the threats cabled from London as to what England intended to do, it can be stated without exaggertion that the intentions of England or any other nation is cutting no figure whatever in this matter. Hawaii is going to pass under the controll of the United States. That much is certain, but it is not yet decided just how it is to be done. Another certainty in the situation is that Hawaiian sugar producers will not be paid the bounty of 2 cents a pound now paid to Americans under the McKinley law, which some allege to have been the cause of the revolution and application for annexation. Whatever the cause, there are many good reasons for our not neglecting the opportunity to get control of the island.

The majority report of the House Judiciary committee, which investigated the Homestead labor troubles, has attracted wide attention. It was written by Representative Boatner, of Louisana, who says therein that he finds nothing in the constitution which authorizes Congress to interfere with, regulate, or prohibit the employment of Pinkerton or other detectives, by persons or corporations, except so far as they may be engaged in interstate commerce. "The trouble at Homestead," continues the report, "was beyond Federal or Congressional jurisdiction. To permit interference by the Federal authorities, without demand of the States, or to make laws which would control or affect the relations of employer and employe in the States, would be to undermine the just authority of the States and to interpose Federal authority upon a subject of which the State has, and ought to have, supreme control."

20 of the 29 Senators that voted against the anti-option bill when it was finally passed by the Senate were democrats, and 11 of the 40 votes cast in favor of the bill were from democrats. Four democrats were paired and did not vote.

The investigation of the whiskey trust, authorized by the House, will be conducted by a sub-committee composed of Representatives Bynum, of Indiana; Stockdale, of Mississippi; Buchanan, of New Jersey, and Powers, of Vermont.

There was a general surprise when the Senate voted down a motion made by Senator Sherman to make the Nicaragua Canal bill the "unfinished business" of the Senate, which would have given it the right of way every day after 2 o'clok. There is hardly one chance in ten that this bill can get through the present House, but it has been supposed that the Senate intended to pass it any way. Perhaps after all it will go to join the numerous other matters that are stated to be left over for the Fifty-third Congress to wrestle with.

Representative Fellows, of New York, is chairman of the committee that will investigate the spending of Panama Canal money in the United States. Col. Fellow is a shrewd lawyer and as a skillful cross examiner has few equals. Furthermore, he is deeply interested in the subject he is investigating. All of which increases the chances for the exposure of somebody, if there is any truth in the charges that have been from time to time made, both in this country and in France, of the bribery of Americans of prominence. Ex-Secretary Thompson will be one of the witnesses heard. He was president of the American end of the company.

The Senate, which has only passed two of the appropriations bills, seems at last to realize that it is in a hole. Beginning today, it will meet at eleven o'clock.

If the gold in the treasury is reduced as much this month as last, Secretary Carlisle will find less than the $100,000,000, known as the gold reserve fund, when he takes charge. There is now less gold in the treasury than at any time for many years, and of course what is there will have to be paid out whenever Treasury notes are presented for redemption.

CORRESPONDENCE

ROCKFORD RECORDS.

The I. O. G. F. lodge of this place held public installation and rendered a short program of recitations singing etc., last Tuesday evening. The following are the officers installed: H. C. Parslow, C. T.; Geo Irying, P. C. T.; Miss M. Irving, V. T.; Wm. Clifford, Chaplain; Gordon Ewing, Sec'y.; Mrs. Gordon Ewing, Ass't. Sec'y.; Mrs. O. R. Fassett, S. J. T.; Mrs. Teeney, Treas.; Ray Twombly, F. Sec'y.; J. Sausser, Mar.; Mrs. J. Sausser, D. Mar.; Oel Tallman, Guard; Floyd Benner, Sent. Mrs. N. Ewing, L. D., was installing officer and was assisted by Marshal Jno Teeney and Deputy Mar. F. Miller.

The Rockford school go to Delano, Friday night, the 10th, to spell with the scheol at that place and try and get even with the defeat they received two weeks ago at Rockford. The Rockford scholars have been studying the list considerable of late.

Mrs. Chas. Fredrick has been very sick but is improving.

Mrs. W. C. Hawk is also on the sick list.

Mr. Stanley, brother of the late Chas. is visiting in Rockford.

There was no dance in Rockford, Friday night last, on account of bad roads and very cold weather.

The past week has been very stormy and cold interfering with business considerable. The roads being badly drifted.

Mr. Kyle from the southern part of the state, an old neighbor of Mr. Clark spent a few days in this vicinity in quest of a farm in the woods. He returned home Monday.

Answering a correction of the Items from Rockford, Jan. 20, '93 in regard to a proposed road from Mr. Jenkins to Lake Sarah, which appeared in your last issue over the signature "A subscriber" I wish to state that at the time the items referred to were written, the town supervisors had apparantly accepted the 3rd petition as legal as they had called a meeting of citizens to consider it and give objections. The supervisors said after they took the vote which stood 6 for and 7 against that the road would be laid any way and as they have the power to say whether it shall be or not it was concluded that it should be as they said. The petition was later called into question and declared illegal.See Rockford items, Jan. 27th. The critic it appears is not aware that the station and immediate surroundings is known as Lake Sarah, not Sarah lake as he has it and he merely wished to give vent to his feelings in the matter as there was nothing in the items which stated whether it was just or unjust to put the road through. The supervisors are to alone decide this.

Olof Olson, of Willmar, Grand Recorder of the A. O. U. W. of Minnesota, visited Rockford Lodge at their meeting last Thursday evening. This is one of the greatest orders in the state. INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

The cold and stormy weather of last week, blockaded the roads and put a stop to most all kinds of business.

Most every body is sitting by the fire these days studying the almanac and consulting the weather prognosticators.

There will be a farmer's Institute held at town Hall, Armstrong, Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock for the purpose of taking up practical farming. All the farmers are invited to come out.

Quite a number of our town people are on the sick list, afflicted with colds, rheumatism, etc.

The district schools in Independence was not largely attended last week.

The American hog with bristles begins to think he is being recognized about as much as the hogs without bristles. Some say the McKinley bill brought pork up to 10 cents a pound. And what brought wheat down to 50 cents a bushel? These fellows that have been reading so long through high protective glasses made out of McKinley's boot tops can hardly seem to understand that pork is scarce and that is what brings up the price.

Some of our state senators had the courage to vote against the world's fair appropriation. In this we think they done right.

Some of the neighbors say there is plenty of wolves in the country seeking who or what they may devour.

MAPLE PLAIN MUSINGS.

The Eagle stated, last week, that Mrs. A. S. Beede called and informed the editor of that paper that the good people of Rockford were all torn up over something that had been said concerning the Rockford-Delano spelling match, and then went on at great length, gossiping about the matter in such a general and incoherent way that few people have been able to make any sense out of the article at all, other than that Mrs. Beede was unable to go through with the enterprise without having trouble. As has ever been the case with people who have been successful in any calling in life, Mrs. Beede has some very bitter enemies, especially among the women, who are constantly on the lookout for something to gossip about to her injury and detriment. And an article like that in the Eagle gives them occasion to repeat, what they have already too often said, that everything with which Mrs. Beede has anything whatever to do must end up with a fuss. During the late campaign it was reported, among numerous other unkind things, that Mrs. Beede was a woman much given to telling lies, and it does not require a very high degree of intelligence to comprehend that such an article as the one referred to in the Eagle would naturally re-call these campaign stories and cause many, who happen not to be personally acquainted with the accomplished principal of the Rockford schools, to believe that if anybody had lied about the spelling match, Mrs. Beede was the one. If the editor of the Eagle would exeercise a little common discretion in writing his editorials his paper would bear a better reputation and many good people who have never done him a wrong would not be caused to suffer undeservedly.

On Wednesday evening, Feb. 1st, a pleasant surprise party was held at the residence of Mr. William and Mrs. Lizzie Haney, in commemoration of the birthday of Mrs. Haney. Among the beautiful things presented to the couple was a $10. teacher's bible, a gift to Mr. Haney, who has long been superintendent of the Presbyterian Sabbath school here. Mrs. Flora Budd bought the bible and she is to be congratulated for the good judgment exercised in making such an excellent selection. She presented the book to Mr. Havey in a neat speech, which was responded to by the popular Sunday school teacher in an address which showed deep appreciation of the honor bestowed upon him. The book was a gift from Mr. Haney's friends, who are legion in these parts.

Chas Peterson, Sr., who a few years ago owned what is known as the Geo Hoisington farm on the Watertown road, one mile and a half southwest of Maple Plain, died on the 1st inst., at his home in Minneapolis, and was buried in that city last Sunday. Miss Annie Anderson, of this place, attended Mr. Peterson's funeral who was her uncle and a brother of her mother. Mr. Peterson leaves a wife, three grown daughters, two sons and a host of friends to mourn his loss.

Charley Benjamin, oldest son of Mrs. Benjamin of this place, who has suffered for a long time from an abscess of the leg, is now receiving treatment for his infirmity at the Asbury Methodist Hospital, Minneapolis. Charley is a good boy and we all rejoice to learn that he is in a fair way to recover.

Mr. Painter and wife, of Minneapolis, are spending a few days visiting with the family of Mr. Ash Ingerson. They worshiped at the Presbyterian church, Maple Plain, last Sunday.

The friends of Rev. S. M. Marsh have been trying for sometime past to learn the real cause of his sudden and uncerimonious removal, and as a result of the carefullest investigation, it is now known that Rev. Marsh was not at any time guilty of a greater sacrilege than parting his hair in the middle.

Mr. Oley Homlyvick, who lives on the Island in Lake Independence, is very ill. Mrs. Sarah Nelson, of Armstrong, wife of Chas Nelson, and Mrs. French, of Maple Plain, are also on the sick list.

Mrs. Katie Haskel returned last week from Dakota, where she had been to visit her son. Mrs. Haskel was caught in the snow blockade on her way home and delayed two days.

Mrs. Sarah Robinson, who was prostrated last week by erysipelas, is convalescent.

The Star Hotel has a new soap-dish and a bran new boot-jack.

The friends of Prof. J. T. Pribble, the venerable teacher of Osseo, and excounty superintendent of schools, are using all the influence at their command to prevent the confirmation of Bayard T. Shaver as assistant superintendent. It is now known that scores of the people throughout the county voted for Prof. Lewis, who was during his last term, and is now, an invalid, utterly incapacitated for the performance of the duties of the office himself, with the understanding that Osseo's popular and accomplished educator was to be his assistant, who otherwise intended to vote for Mr. Henry. Prof. Lewis' silence concerning the matter, in the face of so much public discussion of it, confirms the belief that he did promise the place to Prof. Pribble, and he (Lewis) is coming in for a great deal of public condemnation just now, which, in the light of existing circumstances, he richly deserves. The county commissioners are talking about declaring the office vacant, as Prof. Lewis is lying in a hospital in Wisconsin, and Shaver is not confirmed, and not liable to be. Prof. Lewis is a very stubborn and unreasonable man, and there is little likelihood that he will accede to the wishes of his party, and the commissioners will oust him, as they should do. He was a dead weight on his party all through the campaign, and, but for the aid of Prof. Pribble and the independent candidacy of Mrs. Beede, would have been defeated. Shaver would not lift a hand to help him.

Mr. Enoch Cleveland, cousin of Grover Cleveland, President-elect of the United States, announces that he will have a surprise party at his house, on the 24th, his 73rd birthday.

Hamline University.

EDITOR GAZETTE:—You stated you had received letters from students attending institutions of learning in this state. I thought Hamline University might be represented in the columns of your paper. A person who has never attended a college, has a vague idea of the fundamental principle it has of enlarging the faculties of the mind. It is not the course of study altogether that makes a college course desirable. When a student departs for a college he leaves behind him the influence of home protection, and comes in contact with other surroundings where he must think and act for himself. The old adage is mind sharpens mind, so here the rough edges are worn off, and the mind is cultured in its contact with those of other students.

The faculty is a great faction in college life, and has power to bring the untutered mind to search after knowledge and inspire it with an intense desire for advancement. These men have spent their entire lives in accumulating the knowledge and experience of past ages, so they may impart it to others, and if they are in sympathy with their pupils, they have great influence in moulding their mental and moral vision.

The college was established for men wishing to become scholars or follow a professional career, but graduates find positions in business as soon as any other man.

College graduates are better capable of becoming teachers or high school principals than graduates of a Normal school; for a graduate of one of these schools enters the Freshman year at college, and we have at Hamline University, graduates of the Mankato Normal school, who entered the Freshman class at our University. In looking over a catalogue of Harvard University I saw that Hamline was the only institution of learning in the state whose graduates were admitted into the Senior class without an examination. But I have departed from my subject for my intention was to give a description of Hamline University. It has three large buildings, Ladies' hall, Sciene hall, and University building. Students have three courses of study to choose from Classical, Latin-scientific and Special. In the special course students are permitted to select their studies from any course that they think will be the most satisfactory for their future life, for many have not the time or means to graduate. The library has four or five thousand volumns; books of history science, art, poetry and fiction all if properly used, cultivate a taste for good literature. The museum is in the third story of Science hall, and consists of curiosities such as fossils, insects, animals and minerals, which are used in the study of Zoology. We have four literary societies and an active member receives as much benefit as from a course of study, for it develops the reasoning and debating power, and makes a good public speaker. Lincoln and many other American statesman first obtained and cultivated their debating power in a literary society. Speech making is a constant necessity in all sorts of assemblies civil, religions commercial, scientific, political and agricultural. There is also the practice in parliamentary law that trains men to preside over assemblies and makes them competent, where a good understanding of these laws is united with nerve, to soothe the turbulant feelings of angry debators and bring order out of pandemonium. A paper is published by the students, who are the only writers and managers, this work often cultivates a taste for journalism.

A college is never wanting in athletics. Hamline is not wanting, we have a gymnasium with a physical director, a base ball team and a foot-ball team with which the writer has had sad experience. During the winter months a portion of the campass is flooded with city water and the students enjoy themselves skating. A mind thoroughly cultured with a strong body is the most powerful of all created things. The mind is the masterpiece of creation and united with a healthy body is the potent power of the Universe. I believe Hamline University has for its central principle the cultivation of both.

ZERO comes from an Arabic word signifying nothing. This doesn't do it justice. If it comes to that it's worse than nothing.

GEN. BUTLER had a neat little law practice, which was worth $50,000 a year. From other sources, including his bunting factory, he made probably as much more.

SINCE the Cape diamond fields were discovered in 1867, 50,000,000 carats of stones, valued at $350,000,000, have been exported. These would load up two big coal trains.

ANDREW LANG says there are fully 100,000 novelists in Great Britain; but, fortunately for the public, only one author in a hundred finds a publisher willing to launch his book.

THE Chinese are shown by statistics to be longer-lived than any other nation, which fact is attributed to their abstemious habits and their remarkable freedom from phthisis, or pulmonary consumption.

JENNY LIND was long supposed to have left the stage because of certain religious scruples, but this, it is now said, was not the reason. She cared nothing for the glitter of the footlights and she loved her home. That was all there was to it.

THE comet, which was the cause of so much excitement in November last is still visible. It had been growing rapidly fainter since its discovery until Monday, January 16, when it suddenly grew brighter in the most astonishing manner. It may safely be said that the suddenness and extent of this increase of brightness are without precedent in the history of astronomy.

IT costs about $12,000 to get the votes of the electoral college brought to Washington from the forty-four states. When received the returns are locked in a steel safe in the vice president's room. The safe has been specially provided with detective electric apparatus. The day of the count by congress the returns are carried to the house in a pair of well-locked cherry wood boxes.

A MASSACHUSETTS court's sentence of a burglar to half a century's imprisonment is not as hard as it seems, for in all probability the man will never serve half of his sentence. A much harder sentence was pronounced upon a murderer recently by a German court—fourteen years at hard labor, and at the end of that time to be executed. In Germany murderers are rarely pardoned.

THE Mexicans of Santa Rosalie charge the Mormon colonists of that vicinity with openly practicing polygamy in violation of the terms upon which they were permitted settlement in that country. For this reason the Mexican storekeepers refused to sell them goods, and they have suffered some privations in consequence. But they have now established stores of their own.

NO SOONER have European aeronauts improved their balloons almost to the point of perfection for military uses than along comes a Russian scientist with an apparatus which captures the rays of the sun and employs them to burn the balloons, somewhat on the principle by which Archimedes planned to destroy entire navies. We have not seen a detailed explanation of the modus operandi, but a Russian paper states that the balloons can be burned when at a distance of five kilometers from the person handling the apparatus.

THERE still remain in the state of New York forty-one schoolhouses built of logs. This is a decrease of fourteen within the last five years. The number of frame schoolhouses during the same period has decreased but one, the total number being 10,127, while the brick structures have increased 112, to a total of 1,523. The stone schoolhouses number 317, a decrease of forty-six in five years. The total number of pupils enrolled last year in the public schools of both cities and towns was 1,073,093, the services of 78,385 teachers were required, of whom but 5,275 were men. AT a jubilee meeting in the mission rooms in Bridgeport, Conn., Neils Olsen, a thriving jeweler, arose and said that in answer to long and continuous prayer the Lord had fully restored his eyesight. To prove his words, Olsen took up a Bible printed in fine type and read a chapter without glasses and with no difficulty. For years he has not been able to read or do fine work without the aid of fine lenses. He felt his vision gradually becoming weaker, and believing that the Lord sometimes performs miracles in the present day he prayed for better eye sight with faith that relief would come.

EX-PRESIDENT HAYES did not carry a watch, the reason for which illustrates one of the traits of his character. It appears that in his younger days the watch he then carried was the cause of sending two men to the penitentiary. It was stolen from his pocket; the thief was captured, tried, convicted and sent to prison for a term of years. Mr. Hayes recovered his watch, and a second time it was stolen. The thief turned out to be a poor man with a large family, and after he had been sent to the penitentiary Mr. Hayes concluded that he would get rid of the cause of so much trouble to his fellowmen.

The friends of the measure to tax the railroad lands of the state are very much elated at the prospect of their pet bill passing the house at an early date. The bill, which is that of Mr. Markham, of Aitkin, has been agreed to by the house committee on judiciary, under the order of reports of committees, recommended to pass. The committee came to this conclusion unanimously, and after having considered every point which has been raised against the bill, including constitutional questions and the more important one whether the bill would operate to repeal the gross earnings tax, which was feared by some who would otherwise have favored the bill. The committee find especially on this point that it does not so operate.

The same committee have agreed to report recommending for passage the Hopkins bill to tax inheritances, which has been the subject of much discussion in the same committee.

The matter of printing bills is one which causes trouble from time to time. No bill can be printed without the vote of the house until it has been reported by a committee and placed upon general orders. But members are continually bobbing up with motions that their bills be printed, and unless some one wants to make himself disagreeable by opposition it goes through. There are reasons for printing some bills ahead of time, but most of them are campaign literature, said one member recently, and the only object in printing them is to fire them out among admiring constituents to show that the solon is alert.

The house committee on labor and labor legislation has asked the attorney general to pass upon the eight-hour law, and if he reports favorably the committee will doubtless report recommending that bill.

The pages of the legislature have organized a house of their own, with Gray Richardson as speaker. They held one session and waded through considerable business, the first thing being the repeal of an anti-hoop skirt bill. Then the Hennepin delegation was branded as a band of kickers, who are constantly making extra work for the pages. Then the sergeant-at-arms was authorized to appoint five extra pages, the sum of $5,000 was appropriated to be distributed among the employes. A special car for the Chicago trip was ordered and a protest made against having to take care of the reporters' table.

Another thing that the senate did was to adopt the wild moccasin, or lady slipper, as the state flower. Senator Dean was the fortunate senator selected by the ladies' organization to introduce their petition to have such flower selected, and he succeeded in having the resolution adopted without making any particular effort. Senator McHale was the only one who opposed the resolution seriously. The resolution was sent to the house, where it was adopted under suspension of the rules, although it was opposed by Bob Dunn, Fleming of Crow Wing, and Linneman.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Doings of the State Law Makers at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 31.—In the senate, upon motion of Senator Stockton, a committee of five was appointed to watch all food and dairy bills shall be referred. The following bills were introduced: To provide for the government of municipal corporations; amending the law governing county superintendents of schools; increasing by $1 000 the standing appropriation of the Moorhead normal school; appropriating $100,000 to open the closed waterways of Norman and Polk counties; creating an official inspector of steam craft on inland waters; providing that five-sixths of a jury may return a verdict in civil cases after six hours' deliberation; preventing the sale of intoxicants to minors; authorizing the establishment of county poor houses and work houses; providing for the erection of a beet sugar factory at the agricultural college; making fire insurance companies liable for the full face of a policy. The rest of the day was spent in committee of the whole.

The house held but one session, the greater portion of which was occupied in hearing reports of committees. The following bills were introduced: Relating to incorporation of villages; relating to mileage of county commissioners; relating to roads, cross-ways and bridges; to establish the office of examiner of telegraphers and train dispatchers. Mr. Turrel moved to take up the world's fair appropriation bill, notice of passage of which was given by the senate, but it was defeated.

Both houses adjourned until Thursday.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 2.—Both branches tried to earn their salaries today. Two sessions were held and much routine business was completed. In the senate the following bills were introduced: To make married women responsible for her debts, the same as unmarried women, and empower her to convey property to husband or vice versa; amending the law relating to examination of teachers by county superintendents; to provide that all farmers who use a 3-inch wagon tire after June, 1894, shall have one fourth of their road tax abated; to require all county officers to file with the county commissioners a sworn statement of fees received. The following bills were passed: Daugherty's bill to legalize certain documents transferring real estate executed by married women under power of attorney prior to 1869; Stevens' bill making proceedings for vacation of streets and alleys legal if such proceedings have not been protested against for five years; Stevens' bill to authorize sheriffs and deputy sheriffs to complete foreclosure sales after their terms of office expire.

In the house the following bills were introduced: Requiring railway coaches to be heated by electricity; relating to inspection of steam boilers; a free school text book bill; to regulate the wholesale traffic of liquors; relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors to minors; regulating political caucuses and conventions; requiring passenger trains to stop at all county seats; relating to divorce, either husband or wife, who have been insane for 10 years may be divorced; appropriating $100,000 to open the water-courses in the Red river valley; creating new counties the same not to be less than 400 square miles; to provide armories for the national guard; to regulate the employment of children; to exempt public lands used as roadways from taxation; relating to damages against railway companies by employes.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 3.—In the senate a resolution was introduced by Senator Sanborn calling for the appointment of a special commission of five senators and nine representatives to take in charge matters pertaining to the Itasca state park. Bills were introduced to regulate telephone charges; relating to construction of fish ways in dams; to prevent pool selling.

Senator Allen's bill requiring the publication of proceedings of village councils was amended to provide that the charge shall not exceed the legal rate for such work, and then passed.

Senator Smith's amendment to the cruelty to animals law was lost, receiving only 25 votes.

Among the bills that safely ran the gauntlet of the senate roll call were Stevens' general law for the legalization of defective deeds and mortgages; Stevens' bill relating to uses and trusts; McHale's bill relating to recognizances in criminal prosecutions; Stevens' bill amending the law relating to roads and bridges; Sanborn's bill relating to summons in actions for divorce.

In the house the following measures were proposed: Relating to weights and measures; to tax sleeping cars; appropriating $15 000 for geographical survey of the state; authorizing villages to donate liquor license money to schools to punish pawnbrokers for charging more than 10 per cent; to make mortgages and contracts for sale of real estate, to make same payable at some bank or express office (it is made unlawful to take paper not so stating, or to place on payment); relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors (if towns vote against license it shall not be changed until the general election); to prevent the manufacture and sale of hoop skirts.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 4.—The senate had nothing to do until it reached the calendar. When that arrived the following bills were passed: Providing that liquor licenses may be issued at any time of the year for a full year, and that a pro rata proportion may be refunded if licenses are cancelled; adding sections to the penal code relating to cruelty to children; relating to cruelty to animals. The bill of the committee on printing calling for an edition of 6 000, instead of 3 000 copies of the legislative manual; the bill for the revision of the statutes caused some little debate, but the roll call gave it 31 affirmative votes to 2 in the negative; legalizing the expenditure of $2 806.99 as interest by the state reformatory board; governing the operation of traction engines on the highway; relating to suits in courts of justices of the peace.

In the house the following bills were introduced: To repeal the tax on Minnesota mortgages; to provide for the erection of a new capitol building; to regulate common carriers and define the duties of the railroad commission; compelling railroads to furnish transfer facilities between the lines of the different companies and to make reasonable joint rates; amending chapter 39, laws of 1878, relating to chattal mortgages; to amend the laws of 1877 relating to public libraries, providing for the establishment of free libraries and reading rooms in villages upon a two-thirds vote of the people to provide for an assistant state bank examiner and for the payment of fees into the state by banks and trust companies, the salary of the assistant public examiner to be $1,800 per year; to amend the law relating to the time of publishing lists of delinquent taxes; amending the game laws altering the timber hunting; to require persons convicted of misdemeanor to labor on streets or other public works.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 6.—The senate did not meet until 3 p.m. Most of the time was spent in committee work. Only two bills of general interest were introduced. One was to amend the laws relating to state lands, reserving mineral rights to the state, and the other to amend the law relating to state lands in relation to payments for pine lands.

In the house Mr. Cairns introduced a resolution to investigate charges of whipping and cruelty in the St. Cloud reformatory; a joint committee of five of the house and senate to be appointed, three from the house and two from the senate. Adopted. The chair appointed as house members Messrs. Cairns, Fuller and Skinner. The chair appointed the following members of the joint committee on Itasca park: Messrs. Markham, Abbott, Farlow, Greer, Turrell, Fleming, Schofield, Gorman and Moore.

The following bills were introduced: Relating to mutual building associations, making officers subject to control of state examiner; increasing the bounty on wolves; relating to roads and highways.

A St. Paul Man In It.

The Hoboken, N. J., police recently raided a house in that city in which were stored valuable imported silks, laces, woolen goods, etc., valued at many thousands of dollars. The goods were the proceeds of several daring robberies committed in the West.

Not long ago the police of St. Paul, Minn., arrested John Powell, who said he was connected with a large dry goods house in New York city. Upon being questioned he confessed he had been in the company of a gang of professional burglars for several months. The chief of police of St. Paul notified the Pinkertons of New York, and Mr. Pinkerton had a consultation with Chief of Police Donovan of Hoboken.

Women's Work.

At a recent meeting of the Women's World's Fair auxiliary of Minnesota, Mrs. Crosby, Third district manager, reported that Meeker county would send to Chicago a miniature log cabin made from the wood of the log house in which the first blood was shed in the massacre of 1861. Mrs. Stebbins of Rochester, state chairman of the agricultural department, said that she had learned of more than 100 women in Minnesota managing farms varying in size from 100 to 160 acres, all of whom were prosperous, and thought that accurate statistics in regard to these female pioneers in agriculture would be of interest to the people of the country.

Another scheme to bring Minneapolis into prominence during the world's fair is a plan to have bi-weekly trains run to the city from Chicago, with cheap rates and generous stop-over privileges. The Business union favors this plan and a committee consisting of W. E. Steele, C. L. Travis and W. G. Byron was appointed to confer with a special committee from the Business union on this matter.

NO CHECK WITH THE BABY.

A Hard-Hearted Station Agent and a Young Mother Have a Sharp Conversation.

"But it's my baby—aren't you, darling? And I want to take him home. He'll get sick from cold in this horrid place."

"Can't help it, madam, you'll have to bring the check."

This was part of a conversation between the station agent at Wilkinsburg and an angry mother who had her hand on one end of a baby carriage, while the station agent held the other. Between them was cooing baby snuggled in the carriage. It was dark yesterday evening and it was certainly cold while the young woman expostulated with the railroad official.

The trouble rose this way: Baggage Agent Dick, at East Liberty station, was called on to check a baby to Wilkinsburg, as the 7.40 o'clock train was about to leave East Liberty. A young man rushed into the office and said he wanted a baby carriage taken to Wilkinsburg. Agent Dick got the check and was attaching it when he noticed a baby fast asleep inside. He asked the man if he intended to leave the child there, and he said he did.

His wife would be at the station in Wilkinsburg to get the baby. When the train arrived the young mother tripped up to the baggage car and inquired for her baby. The perambulator was put off, and giving its occupant a hasty kiss, the mother started to roll it off in triumph. Then the station agent appeared and said:

"Where's the check?"

"The what, sir?"

"Why, the check. That baby came as baggage, and I can't release it without a check."

Then there ensued an argument which lasted for half an hour. Another train came along, and the husband alighted. There was a hasty explanation. The husband produced the check, and then started humbly to wheel away the carriage. It is said that the husband was only a listener on the home trip.—N. Y. Sun.

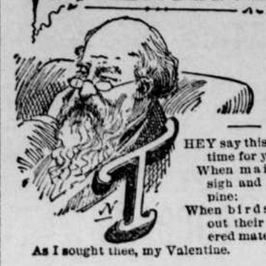
The old Man's VALENTINE.



HEY say this is the time for youth,
When maidens sigh and lovers pine:
When birds stick out their feathered mates,
As I sought thee, my Valentine.

When "young men's fancies lightly turn
To thoughts of love"—as once turned mine.
A half a century ago,
To thee, my only Valentine.

Does love belong alone to youth?
No, in your eyes I still define,
Amid the lines old Time has traced,
The true gaze of my Valentine.

And though the snows of winter now
Are scattered 'mid those locks of thine,
Yet still I see, in memory's glass,
The tresses of my Valentine.

Your nanas, perhaps, with loving care
For others, are less silky fine—
But ah! how beautiful to me,
My faithful, patient Valentine.

No, love is not for youth alone;
In toil and care it thrives—and time
But strengthens every tender tie
Which binds me to my Valentine.

My bride of fifty loving years!
Can youthful trust so brightly shine
As this, by sorrow often tried,
By toil refined, my Valentine?

God's blessing on your toil-worn face!
God's blessing on each tender line
Engraved by hard endurance there
Since you became my Valentine!

Then prate not of a fledgeling love!
Ours typifies the home divine,
Which you and I together wait
Thus—hand in hand—my Valentine.

BRIDGET'S VALENTINE.

FRANK WOOLLETT and his sister Rose were sitting at the table one afternoon busily engaged in cutting and pasting bits of paper of various colors together. It was St. Valentine's day and the two children were having great fun cutting out pink and blue and yellow hearts and piercing them with arrows or concocting wonderful rhymes designed to melt the heart of the receiver.

Frank was staring out of the window thoughtfully biting the end of his lead pencil as he tried to think of a suitable word that would rhyme with love, and Rose was so deeply absorbed in pasting some beautiful green stars upon a pale pink sheet of paper that a ling at the door bell was unheard; so that both the children were much delighted as well as surprised when Daisy Lawler came dancing into the room with a pasteboard box under her arm, from beneath the cover of which protruded gay bits of paper.

"Oh, halloo, Daisy!" exclaimed Frank. "Are you going to make valentines, too? That will be jolly."

"Yes, come and sit down here, Daisy," said Rose, drawing up a chair to the table as she spoke. "Have you made any yet?"

"Yes three lovely ones," was their visitor's answer, as she seated herself beside Rose and opened the box. "There! Don't you think those are pretty?" she continued, as she spread out the finished valentines, gorgeous with stars and crescents and hearts.

After these were admired and commented upon Frank and Rose displayed theirs, and then the combined wisdom and ingenuity of the three were taxed to the utmost in the making of several new ones. Their little tongues chattered merrily, and the hours sped by until it grew dark almost before they were ready. However, when Bridget came in with the lamp, they had quite a pile of valentines, all sealed and directed, and Daisy was just finishing her last one.

"Who is that one for?" asked Rose, with a cheerful disregard for the rules of grammar.

"Well, I suppose maybe you'll laugh at me when I tell you," began Daisy, "but I'm going to send it to our coachman. He's real lonesome, I guess, for he lives alone over the stable and keeps house all by himself. Yesterday, when he took me down to school because it was so stormy, he was telling me about it and how all his friends were in 'Old Ireland.'"

"Poor fellow!" murmured Bridget as she went about the room putting things to rights. "It's a hard thing to be so far from your friends," and she hastily wiped her eyes on a corner of her apron as she spoke.

"I don't know just what to put on this page," said Daisy. "I haven't any pretty pictures left and, besides, I'd like to put something on it to remind him of Ireland."

"Indeed now, Miss Daisy," replied Bridget, "I've got what will just suit you if you'll wait till I go and get it," and she hurried out of the room and upstairs. A moment after she returned with something in her hand which she placed carefully upon the empty page of the valentine. It proved to be a pretty little leaf cut out of bright green satin and was just the right size for the space it was to occupy. It did look very pretty lying upon the pink paper, and Bridget was greatly pleased at the admiration expressed by the three children.

"It's a shamrock leaf," she explained, as Daisy carefully gummed it to the paper. "It was given to me in the old country and your coachman will be sure to like it, Miss Daisy, for all who are homesick for Ireland love the dear little shamrock," and she sighed as she spoke.

"Thank you, Bridget, for giving it to me. It's perfectly lovely, and I know will he like it," said Daisy, sympathetically, while Frank rushed up to her and gave her a tremendous hug.

"Why, Bridget, I never thought of your being homesick," he said. "But I'm sorry if you are. Once I went away for a week when they thought Rose was going to have a fever, and I was homesick and it was awful."

"I wish we had made a valentine for you," put in Rose. "We would if we had known how homesick you felt, but I don't believe there's time now."

"Never you mind about me; I'd rather that poor man had one, for he's worse off than I am," replied Bridget, as she went downstairs to her work.

"Just think of having all your family away off in Ireland!" exclaimed Rose. "I just couldn't stand it!"

"Dennis was telling me yesterday about coming across the ocean from Ireland and how dreadful it was," said Daisy. "All the poor people when they come over have to stay in a part of the ship called the steerage, and it is so close and hot and dirty that they often get sick, and they are crowded in so that they can hardly move. There was a girl in Ireland that Dennis wanted to marry, but he was too poor, so he said good-by and came over here to America to try and earn money enough to send for her. At first he couldn't find much to do, but at last he got a position, and after awhile he managed to save up enough money to send back to Ireland to this girl whom he had left there. She didn't know how to write, but she got some one to write a letter for her, telling what steamer she would come on, and then he waited for the time to come when he should see her again, and the days seemed very long because he was in such a hurry; but just three or four days before it was time for her to come he was taken sick with a fever. For three weeks he didn't know anyone he was so sick, and then he was so weak that it was a good while before he could get out, and by that time it was too late to find the girl. He felt dreadfully to think that she should come way over here to this strange country and find no one to meet her, but though he inquired all around no one remembered her and he has never been able to find her. That is why I feel so sorry for him and want to send him a valentine. And now, Frank, will you print on it for me, because you make so much nicer letters than I can?"

"All right," replied Frank, seizing his pen and dipping it in the ink. "Here goes! What do you want written?"

"The rose is red, the violet's blue, the pink is sweet and so are you," chanted Daisy. "I guess that will do as well as anything," and Frank soon had the lines neatly printed on the page opposite the shamrock.

"Oh, you've spelt sweet s-w-e-t-e," giggled Rose, as she peeped over his shoulder.

"Pshaw!" exclaimed Frank, "so I have. Well, Dennis won't know the difference, will he, Daisy?"

"No, indeed. I don't imagine he knows much about spelling. Hurry up and get your things on and let's leave our valentines around. It's plenty dark enough and I can't come out after supper."

Accordingly, the children hurried on their wraps and soon started out to deliver their valentines, which was always rare sport. One of them would creep stealthily up the steps of a house, and after placing the envelope in a conspicuous position would give the bell a violent pull and then beat a hasty retreat to where the other two were secreted behind a convenient tree or a neighboring stoop.

Once or twice they were pounced upon and nearly caught by children on the watch just within the door, but they managed to escape and fled laughing down the street. At last all the valentines had been disposed of except the one designed for Dennis, and the children made their way to the narrow street in the rear of Daisy's house, where the stable was situated over which Dennis lived.

"He'll have to come all the way downstairs, so let's all go up to the door and knock as loud as we can and then run," proposed Daisy, gleefully. So the three stepped on the broad doorsill and knocked with all their might and then ran as fast as ever they could go—straight into the arms of a big broad-shouldered man. For a moment they were frightened, and Rose screamed right out, but then Daisy recognized him and laughed: "Why, it's Dennis himself."

"Yes, now I've caught you, you young rogues," he said. "And what is this you are leaving on the doorstep?" and he stooped and picked up the white envelope, which could be plainly seen by the light of the street lamp.

"It's a valentine Daisy sent you, because she thought you were lonesome living here all alone," said Frank, as Daisy looked bashfully down at the sidewalk and said nothing. "Take it out and see if you don't think it is a pretty one."

So Dennis drew out the dainty valentine and held it in his big, clumsy fingers while he gazed at the pink heart transfixed with a silver arrow, as if lost in admiration.

"Open it," said Daisy, "and see how you like the inside. Bridget sent you that." At the name Dennis gave a little start, and then he slowly opened the valentine, but as he saw the pretty green shamrock the paper dropped from his hands and fluttered down to the muddy sidewalk, while he took no notice, but stared at the children as if he was crazy.

"Where did you get it?" he asked, in a whisper. "Tell me quick where you got it."

"Why, I made it, if you mean the valentine," stammered Daisy, frightened and wondering what made him act so strange.

"Where did you get the shamrock?" he asked, eagerly. "How did you come to have that?"

"Why, Bridget Murphy gave it to her, and I don't think you are very polite to act so when Daisy gave you such a pretty valentine," said Rose severely.

But Dennis paid no attention to this rebuke, for his mind seemed full of something else. "Where does Bridget Murphy live?" was his next question.

"Why, she lives with us," said Frank. "She is our upstairs girl. Why, do you know her?"

"Miss Daisy, do you remember what I told you? I'm sure she's the girl I've been looking for all this time. Her name was Bridget Murphy, and I gave her that shamrock."

When they heard this the children were almost as excited as Dennis, and they hurried him off up the street to Mr. Woollett's house. Then they led him up the back steps on to the piazza, and bidding him to stand back in the shadow, they ran off to tell Bridget that some one wanted to see her. Just as she appeared in the doorway Dennis stepped forward so that the light fell full upon his face. At sight of him Bridget stopped, stared a moment and then turned so pale that the children thought she was going to faint.

"Oh, Bridget, don't!" they cried. "That's Dennis, who has been looking all over for you."

Then Bridget smiled and Dennis came nearer. "Dennis!" "Oh, Bridget!" and for a few minutes the children felt that they were quite forgotten. Then Bridget turned and hugged and kissed them each in turn, while the glad tears stood in her eyes as she smiled and said: "Well, children, you thought you wouldn't have any valentine for me, but you've given me the best of the lot."—N. Y. World.

"OPEN IT," SAID DAISY.

BONNIE'S VALENTINE.

Bonnie got a valentine,
Gay in colors blue and gold,
But she could not read it, for
She is only five years old.
So she listened while mamma,
With a smile, the verses read,
And until the very end
Not a single word she said.

"Little maid," 'twas thus they ran,
"Pretty, dainty valentine,
With red cheeks and flaxen curls,
And brown eyes that brightly shine,
Answering to many names—
'Birdie,' 'Darling,' 'Wee Wild Rose'—
You are sweeter, sweeter far
Than the sweetest bud that grows."

When with prettiest disdain
Bonnie said: "All that before
I have heard a fousand times—
Yes, a fousand times, and more.
Great old valentine, I fink."
(And her lip began to curl),
Telling fings a girl has known
Ever since she's been a girl."

An Efficient Physician.

Among the "characters" in the little Hoosier town which proudly owns me as a favorite son is an Irish woman by the name of Lynch. Not long ago Mrs. Lynch made a visit to the town cemetery. The sexton welcomed the old lady with a mournful smile and said sympathetically:

"You have quite a number of little graves to look after, Mrs. Lynch?"

"Yis, God be praised, I hov. I hov nine children buried here."

"What physician do you employ Mrs. Lynch?"

"Dochter Brown, hivin bless him He's the only dochter in town who understood the constitution of me children."—Washington Post.

As With One Accord.

A witty individual one morning wagered that he would ask the same question of fifty different persons and receive the same answer from each. The wit went first to one and then to the other, until he had reached the number of fifty. And this is how he won the bet. He whispered, half audibly, to each:

"I say, have you heard that Smith has failed?"

"What Smith?" queried the whole fifty, one after another; and it was decided that the bet had been fairly won.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Church Hospitality.

The anecdote is told of Gen. Grant that soon after his first nomination for the presidency he was in the city of ——, where he had not been expected and was known to but few, and there on a rainy Sunday, entered a church and took a seat in a vacant pew not far from the pulpit. The man who rented or owned the pew, coming in and seeing some one in the seat, sent the sexton to ask him to leave it, which the general quietly did, simply saying: "I supposed it was probably the pew of a gentleman, or I should not have entered it!"—Detroit Free Press.

ELECTRICAL SCIENCE.

A TOWER 1,670 feet high, of iron and steel and lighted by electricity, is proposed for Copenhagen, Denmark.

SIDEWALK showcases which formerly were left in partial darkness after nightfall are now quite commonly illuminated with incandescent electric lights.

MR. W. H. PREECE, the well-known electrician, has succeeded in sending a telephonic message from the shore of the Bristol channel, near Cardiff, to the island of Flatholm, three miles off, without the intervention of a connecting wire.

ONE of the unsolved problems of electrical engineering seems to be the designing of a successful lightning arrester for trolley roads. Many electricians have worked on it, but notwithstanding their efforts thunderstorms continue to burn out armature and thus paralyze the heart of the system. Spring lightning is coming soon, and here is a good chance for budding electrical genius to display itself.

—Read the advertisement in another column of the Delano Cornet Band Entertainment for Tuesday evening.

—Watertown people are figuring on having a new bank at that place. A Mr. Morrison, of Anoka, is to be the concern.

—A rotary snow plow passed through this place, Monday evening on its way west. When in operation it makes the snow fly.

—Charley Conzet has purchased the 25 minute horse owned by John O'Leary. Charley will once more drive a fast horse on the street of Delano.

—Read the article "Hamline University" by Charles S. Hawker, in another column. Charles is making good use of his opportunities at that institution this winter.

—The supper given by the young ladies of the Catholic church, in the city hall, on Wednesday evening, was as such things usually are an enjoyable occasion. Net proceeds $38.50.

—There is talk of I. Gutzwiller, Jr., a Delano capitalist, investing some of his wealth in a paper mill, in Delano, to keep up with Buffalo's match factory, Go in Ignatius! Go in!

—Frank Pogrzeba and Miss Aggie Frach were united in holy wedlock by Father Lawrence, of Delano, at the Catholic church. The wedding festivial was held at the residence of the bride's parents. All reported a good time.

—We are creditably informed that the Eagle was about as near the truth as it often gets when it charged Sam Cutter with being thrown into a snow drift; and that Mr. C. has had no experience of the kind intimated at by the old bird.

—Prof. Grout, of Minneapolis, sojourned with Delanoites for the greater part of this week, and while here put several organs in tune among them that in the M. E. church. The professor understands his business, and a good many other things.

—The Rockford school and the Delano school are to try conclusions as to which can spell the best, tonght at the city hall. We understand that according to previous arrangements an admission fee of 10 cts. is to be charged to aid in purchasing books for a public library.

—People are looking about for a city council to be elected in a few weeds. There are more candidates that people know they don't want than there is that they do won't. A. W. Wittman, Sam Pape or Andrew Hanseman would make a good recorder, and either could, doubtless be elected.

—Farmers are getting a good price for most of their products save wheat. If they gave more attention to raising other things than the golden grain we are of opinion they would be better off. Perhaps they would not have so much money at one time as if the farm was all in wheat, but they would have it oftener and in the whole year probably more of it.

—Yesterday we had the heaviest fall of snow of the season. It came down in large flakes, most of the day, filling the road almost as fast as teams broke it open. Today the sun came out in all his brightness and as the winter is more than half over and we have had a spell of very cold weather we now look for more pleasant days.

—The Eagle appears to be bidding for a controling interest in the village election. A short time ago she intimmated that the village funds could be applied on the Public school debt. If she had her say doubtless in a short time the village treasury would be as far in the mud as the school treasury is in the mire. Even if she had to appropriate $5000 of the village funds to building a paper mill for the editor of that paper. There is no trouble about a surplus in any treasury she controls, save her own, and even that appears to have been leaking a few pennies, on several occasions, if reports from there be true.

—Judging from the boisterous conduct of the occupant of a certain saloon last Sunday it would appear that the liquor laws are not being very rigidly enforced in this village and that at least some of the saloon-keepers are driving a big Sunday trade, which they claim is necessary to make their business pay under the present high license.—Eagle.

Woner if she refers to the place where the business end of the bird buys her beverages before breakfast every Sabbath morning. Probably no one in our town knows better than the "Eagle" when and where the Sabbath laws are broken in this respect, in this neighborhood.

—Liveryman Dell Young is afflicted with a pony that totes double.

—Jacobs & Guptil Hotel, and Danforth & Hanna Livery, are the latest changes in Delano business firms.

—The Eagle finds fault about other people's side-walks. Should the old bird try to get her two heads together we think she would have more difficulty in finding the sidewalk than in any other place in town.

Tariff Pictures.

In the year ending June 30, 1890, our imports of buttons and button forms were valued at $3,207,128

Imports of these goods were valued at only $1,317,203

In 1892. This explains the unprecedented prosperity which has come to pearl button workers under the new tariff.—New York Press.

In this neighborhood it does not appear to show that. There is not a pearl button manufactory near here. And a genuine pearl button is kind of a curiosity. Where the gentleman formerly wore about half a dozen pearl buttons on his white shirt now he does not have one. But uses bone, celuloid or other cheap make shifts in their stead. We are not of the impression that the pearl button makers have grown wealthy off of their sales in this section. Get some better arguments for your "protective" theories or keep still.

County Cullings.

The Democratic county committee met at Waverly, on Saturday last, and talked over Democratic affairs. It was determined that the sooner after March 4, the post officers were replaced by Democrats the better the average democrat would be pleased. There seems to be several applicants for the Postmastership at Howard, as well as at Annandale, Monticello and Clearwater. It was deemed best by the committee not to give it to a merchant where several merchants applied in one town.

On a recent visit to Waverly we were shown through the Waverly bank by the gentleman in charge Mr John Campbell. The building, vault, safes and the other fixtures compare favorably with those of our own village or even of the city banks.

Paper and Whiskey

Old Gutzy, last week, criticizes a merchant in town for buying his supply of paper in the cities. Now that merchant I presume works on the same principal that Gutzy some 20 years ago, then young Gutzy, did, when he bought whiskey in St. Paul by the barrel had it sent up to the county and used by gallon jugs to corrupt the voters of the county with. Zeibarth vs. Gutzwiller.

When the scribbler of the Eagle last week says that I work tooth and nail for the nomination of Treasurer the fellow must have had an attack of Delirium tremens for he knows that I never worked for a nomination for any county office yet. If true, what he says that I am an office seeker, it seems that that, at least, is one thing that we have in common; or must I remind Gutzwiller of the time, when that brewer from St. Michaels carted him through the county when he begged of the people to vote for him on account of him being a cripple? Must I remined him that when he was kicked out of the democratic party he ran Independent for Judge of Probate?

Has he not at every election, village, town or school district tried to get a petty little office and I am satisfied if the office of village scavenger was created, Gutzwiller would try and get it eyen if he had to appoint his pup as a deputy. WM. ZIEBARTH.

The government owes the Louisana sugar planters nearly $8,000,000 bounty, and the planters are kicking because payment is not made. Be patient, gentlemen, Uncle Sam is a little hard up just now. The old gentleman's generosity got the better of his judgment, and now he must hustle for a larger income.—Farm, Stock and Home.

A Great Seed Establishment.

$1,100 FOR EARLY TOMATOES.

We are in receipt of a Seed Catalogue for 1893, published by F. B. Mills, Seedsman, Rose Hill, New York. Mr. Mills has a very novel idea in getting up his Catalogue. It is very plain, and his idea is to give his customers a very large amount for their money.

With every order amounting to $1.00 or more he allows the customer to select 50 cents' worth in packets free, their own choice, thus you see everyone gets $1.50 for their $1.00.

Among the many premiums offered for Cabbage, Onions, Potatoes, and Pansies, we might mention the Early Tomatoes. $500 is offered to any person growing a ripe one in 75 days or less from day seed is sown; also $400 to person growing a ripe Tomato in least number of days from day seed is sown, $125 for next and $75 for next.

He offers one of the finest lines of Vegetable and Flower Seeds that can be found, and prices are very reasonable.

He offers $1,500 to club raisers for largest club order and largest number of customers secured by any one person.

Last year he paid Mrs. T. B. Young, Rock City, Ill., $500 for largest order. His Catalogue is very interesting and no one who plants Seeds can afford to be without it. It gives a birdseye view of his establishment together with interior views of his Seed Houses, showing how the work is carried on, and photographs of persons who have won prizes.

His Seeds are becoming known everywhere for their excellent quality and Mr. Mills guarantees to please all his customers. After looking this Catalogue all through we would advise our readers to write for one at once, for it is free to any one applying, and try some of his Seeds this spring.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

Abraham Lincoln.

Sunday, Feb. 12, was observed throughout the country as the birthday of Abraham Lincoln. Many eloquent speeches and sermons were delivered on his life and death. He was born in Hardin (now Larue) county, Ky., Feb. 12, 1809. His early years were spent as were the pioneer days of most children of his time. He was always first in sports, and fond of books, borrowing what he could from neighbors far and near. He flatboated down the Mississippi when old enough, clerked in a store, studied law, and did what many other young men do, saw hard times for years. Finally success came and the door that awaits the opening of some one to the white house at Washington let him in. He served as President of the United States for four years and was re-elected and had served but about six weeks when he was shot in the head, at Ford's Theatre in Washington, dying the next day, March 15, 1865. The whole country mourned his loss. By proclamation he freed 4,600,000 slaves from bondage, on Jan. 1, 1863, and successfully presided during the most trying hours of our goverments existence, since its first days. His name will long be honored.

So many plans have been proposed for free text books that it is possible that no arrangement can be come to, consequently none will be adopted. Some want free books for the smaller children in the lower grades, and think those larger and more advanced able to buy their own. Some think it a useless expenditure of money to try to keep the little fellows supplied while they favor buying advanced books for the larger scholars. Some want the whole school supplied from the school treasury. Whatever way, if any, is adopted we predict continued disagreements and wranglings concerning the books, among pupils, teachers and school officers. Where no body has charge of the books continually, no one wants to be responsible for damage done.

TUESDAY, Feb'y. 14 was observed as Valentine day. The origin of the custom, long prevalent of sending letters, either complimentary or otherwise accompanied by pictures agreeing with the letters seems to have been lost in oblivion, already. History tells us, however that St. Valentine was a bishop or a presbyter, and that he was beheaded at Rome in the reign of Emperor Claudius II, (270) and early canonized. It was formerly customary to draw a valentine from among the names of a number of the opposite sex placed in some vessel for the purpose. Also to make presents on that occasion.

GLADSTONE, the grand old man of England, made the grandest effort of any man of his age, in presenting to the English House of Commons his plan for Irish Home Rule. The thought of a man 84 years of age who has been in the position of Gladstone for years, familiar with the workings of the English law, and of the down trodden condition of the people of Ireland, standing before the men who make the laws pleading as only Gladstone could for home rule, for the oppressed. It is a fit crowning effort to a long life of usefulness.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 10, 1893.

An early extra session of the Fifty-third Congress more certain than at any time since Congress met. Ex-Gov. Campbell, of Ohio, one of the prominent democrats who were in Washington this week, who is believed to enjoy the confidence of President-elect Cleveland, said while here: "Yes, I think chances of an extra session are good, if not almost certain. The silver law should be repealed, and as it will not be done at the present session, judging from this week's attempt and failure, it must be done by an extra session. The democratic platform demands such a repeal; a general sentiment in this direction pervades the democratic party; the silver question was one of the main issues of the last campaign; the party stands pledged to its repeal and it will keep its pledges." Gov. Campbell acknowledged that he could name several of the coming cabinet, but courteously declined to do so.

Senator Morgan introduced a bill this week that will simplify the proceedings should the present negotiations result in the annexation of Hawaii. The bill provides that whenever the United States shall acquire dominion over any foreign country or place, by treaty of annexation or otherwise, the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint a governor and legislative council for the same, whose acts shall be subject to revision or repeal by Congress. Mr. Harrison has no yet officially recognized the Hawaii commissioners, and their negotiations are all with Secretary Foster. It is believed that Mr. Harrison, who is known to favor annexation, is waiting to hear what the representative of the deposed Queen may have to say before taking any official action. In the meantime the State Department is gathering information about Hawaii and its financial condition and prospects, in order that Congress may act intelligently on the matter when a decision is reached by Mr. Harrison.

The investigation of the money spent in the United States by the agents of the Panama Canal company, now being conducted by a House committee, has gone far enough to create a general demand for more information. It has brought out the fact that a great deal more money was spent in this country than the public had any idea of, and that it was largely paid for secret services of some sort, the receiver giving no voucher for what he received. It is to be regretted that this investigation was not started earlier in the session, as it is feared that there may not be time between this and the 4th, of March, beyond which dates the committee will have no existence, to ascertain the names of those who received this money. The reported sudden illness which has been made the excuse for ex-Secretary Thompson's not appearing before the committee, according to promise, has been unfavorably commented upon, but Col. Fellows, chairman of the committee, says he believes it is straight and that Thompson will come as soon as he is able to travel.

Representatives Fithian, of Indiana; Baker, of Kansas, and Lawson, of Georgia, have united in a sharp minority-report against the bill providing for a permanent Census bureau, which has been favorably reported by the House Census committee, of which they are members. It says, among other things that the present Census Bureau is divided into twenty-five divisions, all but seven of which should be eliminated; many of the statistics taken under the last census are merely duplications of reports made by other bureaus of the Government; that the Census Bureau has been enlarged from time to time more to create offices and salaries than for legitimate purpose; that consequently the Census has become a jumble of figures and irrelevant inquiries filling volumes, which make their appearance so late that they are only useful for waste paper; and lastly that the maintenance of a permanent Census Bureau would be at least treble the amount estimated—$200,000 a year.

The House passed the Quarantine bill this week, and it is now in the hands of Mr. Harrison.

Mr. Morton looked as though he really enjoyed presiding over the joint session of the House and Senate held Wednesday to count the electoral votes and officially declare Cleveland and Stevenson elected President and Vice President, and he probably did. Most men would, in his place.

If the amendments to the pension laws, which have been approved by a majority of the House Appropriations committee, become laws the Pension office will be transferred to the War Department and be under the control of detailed army officers, and the payment of pensions will be stopped to those having an income of as much as $600 a year; to widows who married soldiers since 1870, and, except in cases of total disability, to all alien non-residents.

CORRESPONDENCE

ROCKFORD RECORDS.

The weather for the past week has greatly moderated to what it was the previous week and people begin to move about more of late.

Mr. Purdy visited Buffalo Tuesday, returning the same evening.

We have met the enemy and they are ours is the interpritation of the smile on the countenances of the Rockford scholars for the past week. The Rockford and Delano schools met at Delano, last Friday evening and held their second contest of the series in spelling. This time the Rockfords were victorious, the Geographical words used proving too much for the Delano school. This makes it even. They should now spell again to find who is entitled to the honors. There should be some disinterested parties chosen to arrange a match and an uninterested person secured to pronounce the words from numerous books so either school will not have the advantage, the late mode of spelling has caused considerable hard feeling between the schools which should not exist.

Mrs. Jarley will give her wax "Figger" show in the G. A. R. hall, next Saturday evening, Feb. 18th, for the benefit of the Presbyterian church. An admission fee of ten cents will be charged. Every body is invited.

Jno. S. Gurney left Tuesday morning to visit his mother at Rochester, New York.

Archie Darrow, of Britton, N. D., was visiting relatives in this vicinity the past week.

St. Valentine's day was celebrated in the usual way, some are said to have received a goodly number of comic ones.

Among those who attended the spelling match at Delano, Friday evening were Mrs. A. S. Ames and daughter, Rosa, J. Sausser and wife, C. M. Johnson, Mrs. G. Guptil, Mrs. Benner, Miss Fanny Ewing, Chapin Farnham, A. Bucklin, Mr. J. R. Beede, Ed. Darrow, and Miss Carrie Florida.

The ice crop is being harvested now and our meat market and stores are laying in their supply for the summer.

E. Miller and E. Cook left for Minneapolis, Tuesday morning.

C. M. Johnson left Tuesday for Clearwater, Minn., where he will spend a few days with his parents.

The snow is quite deep and unless one keeps the road they are apt to go out of sight or have the pleasure of tipping over. Quite a number have found themselves in the snow suddenly during the past week, but as yet no serious damage has been reported.

MAPLE PLAIN MUSINGS.

We throw our hats high in the air and cheer loudly for Hon. Edward Egan, who, at a meeting of the Hennepin County Board of Commissioners, last Monday, knocked Bryard T. Shayer out cold, in the first round. Mr. Egan's resolution to reject Prof. Lewis' nomination of Shaver for assistant superintendent was carried, after a lengthy debate, by a vote of 4 to 1, Commissioner Dwyer alone voting for Shaver. During the one term that Lewis and Shaver have been filling (?) the superintendent's office they have drawn from the pockets of the people more than $6000.00 as salary, and it is a well-known fact, as stated by Mr. Egan in his argument before the board, that they have served the county in no beneficial way, further than keeping an office open for a few hours on Saturday. The board had deferred action in this matter for many weeks, in order to get at the real merits of Mr. Shaver, which were not found to be such as would commend him to the taxpayers of the county, or warrant the board in confirming his re-appointment. The commissioners propose to see to it that whoever gets the $6000.00 the coming two years will render the commissioners some service in return therefor.

A farmers' institute was held in the town hall, Saturday afternoon. Hon. John McGary presided and interesting speeches were delivered by O. Styner, Mr. Mills, and others. The next meeting is set for Feb. 21, at 7:30 p. m., in the town hall, when a permanent organization will be effected and a committee appointed to draft a constitution The constitution will provide for the admission of ladies as well as gentlemen as members. The purposes of the organization will be to discuss everything pertaining to field and household work on the farm. All educational, legislative and business matters effecting the interests of the farmer will also be discussed It is proposed to make an immediate appropriation of money to purchase merchandise for the community at reduced rates with. It is confidently expected that there will be a large gathering at the next meeting.

After the farmers' meeting, last Saturday, a great many people from a distance, who get their mail here at Maple Plain, waited at the post office an hour or more for the train from the west, expecting to get their GAZETTES, but no Gazette came, though they should have been here Friday evening. Some went away blaming Dr. Catlin, and some, the Delano postmaster, but on making enquiry at the Delano post office since, I learned that the papers were sent as usual, and the blame is with the mail agent on the train. If the mail agent will exert himself enough to get those Gazettes off at Maple Plain, Friday evening, the people here will be eversomuch obliged. Many of our people would rather miss their meals than their GAZETTE.

Prof. James A. Lewis was the Democratic nominee last fall for school Superintendent. He was at the time of his nomination lying in a Wisconsin hospital, where he remained for two months after the campaign opened, and where he returned almost immediately after his re-election. He is, and has been for several years back, a physical wreck with an incurable cancer eating his whole face off, campaign reports to the contrary notwithstanding. How did such a man ever manage to gain an election to such an important office, when the people were well aware of his physical condition? I will tell you. Prof. G. M. Henry, the Republican nominee for superintendent, a mighty good fellow, lived in the northern part of the county; but Prof. Lewis beat him in the very town where he lived. Why? Because Prof. J. T. Pribble, an equally good man, also lived there, and the people of the north voted for Prof. Lewis with the understanding that Prof. Pribble was to be his assistant. Now Prof. Lewis had better appoint him or resign his office. Which shall it be? The people will not tolerate the retention of Shaver.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Our ice and snow crop is abundant this winter, more than we have had for several winters before. For the last two or three weeks it has been hard to keep the roads broke out.

Those who went from Independence to Delano, last Saturday. Say they had a big fair.

Annual town meeting will soon be here again, also the new administration.

Another farmer's meeting at Armstrong, Tuesday evening, 21st, present month. All the farmers are invited to come out.

The State G. A. R. Encampment will meet at Market Hall, St. Paul, 22nd, present month, at 10 P. M.

MARRIED, in Minneapolis on last Sunday, Albert Batdorf, of Independence, to Miss Almena Sutherland, of Minneapolis. It is expected Mr. Batdorf will soon be keeping house in Independence. "And so they marry and are given in marriage as it were in the day of the flood.

B. R. Hoisington has now a new outfit for sawing lumber. Will first begin operation in the Rader neighborhood. Patronage solicited.

There is lots of enquiry among the farmers for hogs just now there seems to be but few on the market.

Yes, we favor the annexation of the Sandwich Islands, it would be a good place to take a homestead, or tree claim, and go into the sugar industry and avail ourselves of the 2 per cent bounty. It would also be good employment for the American Navy to protect their 15 Islands. These canibals would be good subjects for some young enterprising man to go there as missionary and teach them the ways of us Americans. But the question is shall the United States acquire any more new territory.

Mrs. Chas Nelson who has not been expected to live, we are happy to say, is improving.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Mills has a son arrived last Monday. Also Mr. and Mrs. Grant Beal have an heir, born 13th, present month.

This is Valentine day and we suppose it will be improved by many. It looks as if the work on the Great Morman Temple (Hennepin county court house) will be suspended for a while, at least. Until the Gods of Baal can grind out a little more money in some way. The Great Morman Temple at Salt Lake has been 40 years in building, and why not a court house?

Rockford School Essays.

Mrs. Beede, Principal of the Rockford school, kindly sends us several essays written by her pupils, in their school work. From the number, we publish this week, the following:

MAMIE L. LUCAS, 10 years old.

Dear Alice:—I thought I would write and tell you about my trip. I started with a party of friends from Minneapolis on a cold, rainy morning. The rain did not seem to affect the spirits of the party however, which was a very cheerful one. We went by the Sault Ste Marie line to Montreal where we staid a few hours giving us a chance to ride about the city and visit the beautiful cathedral there. Our next stopping place was Portland where we separated. I took the Boston and Maine line for Boston. As I neared the city I saw, in the distance, Bunker Hill monument. I was met by some friends at the Boston and Maine station who took me to East Boston. We crossed the North Ferry to get there. After resting a few days I began my sight seeing.

The first place my uncle took me was Boston Common, I saw there the Soldier's Monument which was erected to the soldiers who fell in the late war. Then I went down the hill to the frog pond where during the Revolution the American boys skated, and the British drove them off. When they complained to General Gage, the British commander, he said he would punish his soldiers severely if they troubled again. From there we crossed the street into the public garden, where we saw exquisete flowers. There is a large bronze statue of Washington on horse back. It is considered a great work of art. My uncle said the longer he looked at it the more life like it seemed. In the centre of the garden is a large pond. We saw on it two boats representing large white swans. In the place next the wings where the body should be the seats for the people are placed.

A few days later we visited the Old North church where the lantern was hung as a signal to Paul Revere. We also visited Faneuil Hall which you know, has been called "The Cradle of Liberty."

On Sunday we went to King's chapel with its funny old, fashioned box pews, its fluted pillars and its pulpit half way up the wall.

We visited several other places but I have not time to describe them. I remain, Your friend,

Boston, Mass., Oct. 27, 1892.

Chickens.

BY EDITH AMES, Aged 13 years.

Introduction, How I like chickens.

Body, The miseries of chicken raising.

Conclusion, In vacation.

O, how I do hate chickens! excepting to eat after they have been well cooked.

We raised about two hundred this summer and, I know by experience, that the only pleasant feature of the business is selling them.

I think when an old hen comes off her nest with a brood of little downy chicks, the little ones are pretty, but after a few days and I have been told to "feed the old yellow hen and her chickens," I have seen enough of them.

Nearly every day this is about what I hear, "Edith, have you fed the chickens?" and every night, "Edith, have you gathered the eggs?" And every time a hen cackles, "Edith, go and see where that hen has laid." And every time the chickens make a fuss, "Edith, go and see if a hawk is after those chickens," until I wish there wasn't any such thing as a chicken.

Once we had a hen that only hatched one chicken and that she would not raise, but we had an old cat that took the chicken and raised it.

I also knew of a hen that crowed just like a rooster, but one day she was killed and eaten for

"Whistling girls and crowing hens
Always come to some sad end."

You can never set anything down and leave if you have chickens around, for you won't be gone two minutes before they are in it. Chickens always scratch up the vegetables in the garden. Every time I step out of doors the chickens are at my heels, they must think more of me than I do of them.

Sunday morning when folks could sleep a little longer, those never-to-be-forgotten chickens are up and clamoring for their breakfast, so of course every one in the house has to march out in obedience to "those chickens."

Chickens are only one pleasure of living on a farm, there are other pleasures I could mention, as washing milk cans and pails.

Taking every thing together I think chicken raising is very unpleasant business, but I suppose next spring I can go on English grammar to setting "sitting" hens and raising those abominable chickens.

FRANCE maintains an army at an expense of $151,000,000 and supports her schools with $21,000,000. The United States expends $115,000,000 for public schools, while the army and navy costs only $54,000,000.

A NEW luminous fungus has been forwarded from Tahiti to Europe. It is said to emit at night a light resembling that of the glow-worm, which it retains for a period of twenty-four hours after having been gathered. It is used by the native women in bouquets of flowers for personal adornment in the hair and dress.

A NUMBER of orders have been given to Philadelphia iron-workers for machinery to be used in distilling alcohol from sweet potatoes. A gallon of alcohol can be distilled from a bushel of sweet potatoes at a small cost, and there is said to be a good profit in the business. Large quantities of alcohol are made in the Azore islands in this way.

BUT little remains of the old prison-pen at Andersonville. There are only a few half-rotted posts left to mark the line of the stockade, and a few low earthworks where the gates were. Some of the wells and tunnels dug by prisoners who hoped to escape thereby are also to be seen. The grounds are now the property of the Grand Army of the Republic.

WALTER BURRIDGE, the artist, is picturing the great volcano Kilauea, the "Inferno of the Pacific," upon a canvas 412 feet long and 54 feet high—22,248 square feet—which shows the wonders of the greatest crater of the globe. This painting, with accessory spectacular effects, will form the volcanic cyclorama in the Hawaiian exhibit for the World's fair.

FISHERMEN along Lake Erie have no memory of such ice as now stretches in an unbroken field from Detroit to Put-in-bay. The entire lake archipelago is frozen about, and teams cross the mouth of the Detroit river. People who have driven out fifteen miles from shore on the lake say that beyond the point to which they ventured the ice extended as far as they could see.

THE house into which Lincoln was carried when assassinated and in which he died possesses such historic interest that congress has been petitioned to purchase it and establish it as a permanent memorial. The amount asked for to buy this and additional relics is $55,000. Among the signers of the petition are Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller, Gen. John M. Schofield and Secretary John W. Foster.

PAUL DU CHAILLU has lived to see the geographical world admit that the stories he told about the gorillas and dwarfs were true. His travels in Africa were published nearly thirty years ago, but it is only three or four years since the geographical periodicals, recording new travels in regions where he had pioneered the way, began to bear testimony to the fact that recent explorers were confirming du Chaillu's assertions.

THE telephotoes, the instrument invented by O. V. Boughton to enable vessels to communicate with each other at long distances, consists of a series of wires and electrical connections operated by a keyboard by which 100 incandescent lights are controlled and made to produce the signals of the Morse telegraph alphabet. The inventor claims that thirty-two candle power lamps can be seen at a distance of ten to fifteen miles.

WHEN a president is inaugurated at Washington he is usually sworn in with a large, new Bible, which is afterward presented to some member of his family. But Mr. Cleveland in 1885 took the oath on his mother's Bible. It was a small book, morocco bound and gilt-edged. So far as is known he still has the book, and in the belief that it will be used at the coming ceremony the clerk of the supreme court has not purchased a Bible to be used on that occasion.

THE steamship Lucania, launched on the Clyde, is not as big as the Great Eastern was, but it is a greater vessel in respect to its power. The Great Eastern was 680 feet in length and 82 feet in breadth, but its engines were of only 7,500 horse-power. The Lucania is 620 feet in length, 65.3 feet in breadth, and its engines of 29,000 horse-power. It is expected to lower the ocean record. Its breadth is about the same as that of the City of New York, but it is 60 feet longer, and the horse-power of its engines is almost one-third greater. The vessel is equipped to carry 1,300 passengers.

AN English woman living near St. John's Wood is proudly wearing an exquisite diamond ring, which she received on Christmas from Sarah Bernhardt. It was presented in recognition of a single very brief meeting, and of a service from which many women would have shrunk. When the actress was staying at St. John's Wood last summer her pet snake (used in her representation of Cleopatra) made its escape and started from Hempstead Heath. The English woman met the truant, noticed that it wore a gold chain and a jewelled ring, captured it and promptly brought it back to its mistress.

THE Minnesota State Agricultural society having decided to hold no fair this year, the directors of the Minneapolis exposition have concluded to combine some of the best features of the fair with their exposition—which opens Sept. 6th and closes Oct. 7th, 1893—and have appropriated a liberal sum for premiums for the products of Minnesota farms, gardens and dairys. A display of minerals of the state will also be a feature. These exhibits, added to the usual industrial, commercial and art displays, with the superb musical and other entertainments in the big auditorium, are expected to make the exposition of 1893 the most memorable on record.

MR. CLEVELAND the night of the 14th announced that he had selected four of his cabinet officers, and they had accepted. They were as follows: Walter Q. Gresham, of Illinois, secretary of state; John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky, secretary of treasury; Daniel S. Lamont, of New York, secretary of war; Wm. S. Bissell, of Buffalo, postmaster general.

THE two houses of the Kentucky legislature balloted the 14th for U. S. senator to succeed Jno. G. Carlisle. Judge Wm. Lindsay, democrat, received a majority of the votes.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Doings of the State Law Makers at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 8.—In the senate Mr. McMillan introduced a resolution calling for final adjournment of the legislature March 22. No action was taken. Senator Leavitt's measure to tax inheritances was passed by a vote of 34 to 8. Sanborn's bill providing that certain costs in civil cases shall be taxed against adverse parties was lost by a vote of 18 to 26.

In the house the following bills were introduced: Relating to forestry fund tax and appropriating $20,000 for state forestry; relating to settlement between state treasurer and county auditors; changing the penalty of delinquent real estate taxes from 10 to 1 per cent per month; to prohibit the spraying of fruit bearing trees while in bloom and being worked by honey bees; to encourage bee keeping; to apply liquor license money to construction of roads and bridges; to regulate horse racing at county fairs.

McGuire's bill relating to railway sidetracks and switches was passed; also the bill by Markham taxing railway lands.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 8.—In the senate the following bills were introduced: To prohibit attorneys taking cases on shares; to regulate the organization of school districts; requiring railways to build sidetracks to elevators; regulating the receipt of grain at terminal points; to purchase 2,452 acres of the Northern Pacific railway in Itasca state park; relating to the formation of farmers' mutual fire insurance companies, compelling street railway companies to protect employes from the weather.

Davis' bill reducing the time which actions for the recovery of real property may be begun from 21 to 15 years was lost. Craig's swamp land bill was passed without dissent.

The house, under suspension of rules, passed the joint memorial to congress for popular election of United States senators. Bills were introduced creating an additional judge in the Fifth district; making the salaries of officials city and county, subject to garnishment. Also several bills appropriating small amounts for bridges. In committee of the whole, Horton's pool room bill was discussed and finally recommended for passage.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 9.—The senate did not have a very lively session. The first matter of interest to come up was Sanborn's silver resolution. Two amendments were defeated and the original was recommend to pass. The elevator resolution was also sent to the house. The following bills were introduced: Authorizing counties, towns or villages to refund their outstanding indebtedness; amending the boiler inspection law, providing for seven instead of five deputy inspectors; amending the school laws; amending the law relating to appeals in justice cases; a bill to provide for memorial medals for the defenders of Fort Ridgeley; creating a commission to distribute them.

In the house but four bills of importance were introduced. The principal one was to appropriate $75,000 for seed grain to farmers whose crops were destroyed by hail or storm in 1892. Other bills were: To allow villages to separate themselves from township government; to permit five-sixths of a jury to return a verdict in civil cases; to prevent blindness in children.

Mr. Underleak called for a report of the expenditures by the world's fair commission of the state appropriation.

Mr. Fleming offered a joint resolution to examine into the reason why the state geological reports have not been delivered to the secretary of the State Historical society.

It called for joint committee of three from each body. The resolution was adopted. The chair appointed Fleming, Nelson and Williams as members from the house.

Mr. French, as a personal request, asked to take up and pass, under suspension of rules, H. F. No. 149, to refund money assessed by towns in certain cases. The rules were, on his motion suspended, and the bill was passed.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 10.—The senate had a very dreary time this morning. There was a little life over the bill relating to limitations of actions for the recovery of real property, lost yesterday, which was reconsidered and referred to the committee on judiciary, but nothing more of note occurred until Leavitt's income tax proposition was taken up in committee of the whole. After a hard fight the bill was left in the committee undisposed of. But few bills were introduced, the important ones being: To appropriate $65,000 for improving the state reform school; amending the marriage law, declaring all prohibited marriages incestuous; authorizing towns and school districts to refund their treasurers from liability where money is lost through deposits in good faith in insolvent banks; authorizing the formation of societies to procure homes for orphans and providing rules for their government.

In the house, sundry additional petitions for passage of the railway ticket and anti-scalper bill; also against a new capitol and for state grain warehouses instead, were presented and referred. Mr. Greer sent up a bill to prevent the destruction of timber on leased mineral lands; to establish state elevators at Duluth and St. Paul. The session was enlivened by the member from St. Paul, P. H. Kelley, when he introduced a bill prohibiting the smoking of cigarettes. The bill was passed. The rest of the day was spent in committee work.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 11.—The senate was in a killing mood today and disposed of two measures that have been hanging fire since the early days of the session. They were Sanborn's silver coinage resolution and Leavitt's proposition to amend the constitution by providing for an income tax. Both were defeated. There was a hard fight over the income tax proposition and it died hard. The vote which killed it stood 23 to 22.

Senator Smith introduced a bill to permit women to vote and be voted for at municipal elections and Senator Donnelly gave notice that he would introduce, Monday, a bill to provide for the trial by jury of questions on issues of usury.

The house, in the morning hour, took another swing at the anti-pool room bill, on an attempt to reconsider the vote by which the Horton bill was defeated Thursday. The result was that the bill was tightly nailed down in its coffin.

Reaching the calendar, the Walsh bill relating to rights of citizenship, commonly known as the anti-ironclad, was passed, and also the Wyman factory inspection bill. But the bill of Wallblom, to indemnify for damages by mob or riot, was defeated.

The house also passed the Boggs bill to legalize certain assessments upon private property. The Markham bill to protect workmen, in suits to recover for wages, by preventing unfair changes of venue, was passed; also Rodgers' bill for classification of steam boilers.

Mr. Wilson of Goodhue lost his measure to increase the salary of supreme court reporter.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 13.—The senate met at 3 p. m. Senator Sanborn resurrected the silver resolution. The following bills were introduced: To provide for the establishment of free employment bureaus in cities of over 30,000 population; to provide for the trial of questions or issues of usury by jury; amending the law relating to farmers' mutual life insurance companies bringing them under the supervision of the insurance commissioner; relating to the taking of streets for park privileges; appropriating $8,000 to put an additional story on the laundry building at the St. Peter hospital; appropriating $38,500 to complete buildings at the Fergus Falls insane hospital; to amend the law relating to higher education, requiring boards of education to visit schools; to prevent the obstruction of navigable rivers, relating to the construction of booms; offering a bounty of $15 for killing female wolves at certain periods of the year.

The house was in session barely 30 minutes adjourning after adopting resolutions of respect to the memory of Abraham Lincoln.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Suspended Sentences Unlawful.

Judge Severance, of the Sixth judicial district, rendered a decision which declares unlawful a practice in vogue in nearly every municipal and police court in the state, that of suspending sentences upon criminals, either on good behavior or indefinitely. Carl Leisner was last spring sentenced to 90 days' imprisonment in the county jail for drunkenness, it being the third offense under the state law. Sentence was suspended on good behavior. He was arrested Feb. 1 on the charge of disorderly conduct, and without trial was committed to jail to serve out his suspended sentence. His attorney secured a writ of habeas corpus and secured his release on the ground that a municipal court has no right to suspend sentence and that such suspension amounts to an absolute acquittal, and that if a court has power to suspend the execution of a sentence on certain conditions, the fact that these conditions have been broken must be established by a constitutional trial before the execution of the sentence can be commenced.

The D. & W. Railway.

Relinble information has been received that President Van Horne, of the Canadian Pacific, has closed contracts within the past few days in St. Paul for the purchase of the North Star Cain company, owning the Duluth & Winnipeg railway, and also the Superior Belt Line and Terminal company, owning ore docks at Superior. Contracts are also be let for the extension of the ore docks.

The Duluth, Mesaba & Northern railway company met in annual session, and $1,800,000 worth of stock, all but the Foley interest, was represented. The following is a list of new directors elected immediately upon assembling: Alfred Merritt, Leonidas Merritt, Cassius C. Merritt, J. E. Merritt, N. B. Merritt, Alexander McDougall, A. D. Thomson, C. W. Wetmore and W. W. Henry. Afterwards the directors elected the following officers: President, Alfred Merritt; vice president, Leonidas Merritt; secretary, S. R. Payne; treasurer, J. C. Merritt.

Attempted Incendiarism.

An attempt was made to burn the paper mill at St. Cloud. Papers and shavings were found burning in the basement. It happened that the water was on and hose attached. The fire was extinguished without damage. Ten minutes later the mill would have been doomed. Footprints in the snow prove that the attempt was incendiary.

Killed by a Snow Plow.

The Northern Pacific snow plow going west from Fergus Falls struck three men about a mile east of Perham. The men were walking on the track and a blizzard was raging. They did not hear the snow plow. Neither did the men running the snow plow see the men on the track. Michael Lapazaewsko, a Polander, was instantly killed. Robert Burget, the Perham blacksmith, died soon after. Jacob Kamiski, a brewer, is not expected to live.

A State Flag.

The Women's Auxiliary board to the world's fair commission of Minnesota advertised some time ago for designs for a state flag, a request having been sent out for flags to all the states for decorating the woman's building at Chicago. No reward was at that time offered, and although several designs came in, only two were worthy of consideration, and for certain reasons these were unavailable. For instance, one was too nearly like the national flag.

Farmers' Institute.

The State Farmers' Institute held an interesting session at Hastings. The general farm topics and practical talks by the able corps of instructors were received with much enthusiasm by the large number of farmers who were present. The instructors were Supt. O. C. Gregg, of Minneapolis; John Gould, of Ohio; Theodore Louis, of Wisconsin; William Somerville, of Viola, Minn.; Dr. H. M. Reynolds, V. S., of Iowa, and W. A. Henderson, of Waseca.

Saw a Prize Fight.

A sensation has been caused by the arrest of seven prominent men of Redwood Falls for witnessing the Thurber-Phelps prize fight in Renville county last fall. Everyone thought that the matter had been dropped but the grand jury has been busy getting out indictments. Over 300 sports took in the affair and a great deal of anxiety prevails.

The News in Brief.

Gustav Fenske, for seven years employed at R. D. Hubbard's big mill at Mankato, has been accused of carrying on a systematic stealing of flour and provisions to the amount of $500. When detected, it is said, he confessed all. He at once gave his check in full settlement.

Secretary Hart, of the state board of charities and corrections, reports that there are 2,346 inmates in the insane asylums now, compared with 2,198 a year ago. The soldiers' home has 200, against 167 a year ago, and there is no considerable change in the other institutions. The total in confinement is 4,032 as against 3,857 a year ago.

A FAMILY OF LIONS.

An Eye-Witness Tells How They Act in Their Natural State.

"The Large Game and Natural History of South and Southern Africa," by Hon. W. H. Drummond, gives the following account of an eye-witness, which gives a good idea of lion family life:

"I once had the pleasure of, unobserved myself, watching a lion family feeding. I was encamped on the Black Umfalosi, in Zululand, and toward evening walked out about half a mile from camp. I saw a herd of zebra galloping across me, and when they were nearly three hundred yards off I saw a yellow body flash toward the leader and saw him fall beneath the lion's weight. There was a tall tree about sixty yards from the place, and anxious to see what went on, I walked up to it, while the lion was still occupied too much to look about him, and climbed up. He had by this time quite killed the beautifully striped animal, but instead of proceeding to eat it, he got up and roared vigorously, until there was an answer, and in a few minutes the lioness, accompanied by four whelps, came trotting up the same direction as the zebra, which no doubt she tried to drive toward her husband. They formed a fine picture as they all stood around the carcass, whelps tearing it and biting it, but unable to get through the tough skin. Then the lion lay down, and the lioness, driving her offspring before her, did the same four or five yards off, upon which he got up, and, commencing to eat, had soon finished a hind leg, retiring a few yards on one side as soon as he had done so. The lioness came up next and tore the carcass to shreds, bolting huge mouthfuls, but not objecting to the whelps eating as much as they could find. There was a good deal of snarling and growling among these young lions, and occasionally a stand-up fight for a minute, but their mother did not take any notice of them, except to give them a sharp blow with her paw if they got in her way. There was now little left of the zebra but a few bones, which hundreds of vultures were circling around wanting to pick, while almost an equal number hopped awkwardly about on the ground within fifty or sixty yards of it, and the whole lion family walked quietly away, the lioness leading and the lion, after turning his head to see that they were not followed, bringing up the rear."

WHAT PAWNBROKERS SEE.

Pathetic Scenes That Are Everyday Occurrences.

On a recent cold day a young man, who looked at first glance to be well dressed, slipped into one of the numerous pawnbrokers' places on the Bowery, says the New York Times. His overcoat, which he wore tightly buttoned about his body, was so nearly new that the "store creases" had not yet disappeared. It was of good material and had probably cost forty or forty-five dollars. As soon as the door closed behind him the man took off the overcoat, threw it on the counter and laconically asked of the pawnbroker: "How much?" "Four dollars," was the response, after the garment had been examined. "It cost me forty dollars. I want ten dollars," pleaded the man. "I'll give you five dollars." "No." "Well"—after another critical examination—"I'll let you have six dollars and not a cent more." With a curse the man put the six dollars in his pocket and walked out into the street to shiver in an old, thin and ragged suit of clothes which had previously been concealed by the overcoat. "That coat," said the pawnbroker to a friend who had watched the transaction, "has probably come from some careless person's front hall; but I can't be expected to know about the people who come here or the articles they bring. Besides the coat is cheap at six dollars."

Within five minutes after this incident a really well-dressed man, but without an overcoat, stepped into the place by a side door. Without a word he took off his coat, cleared its pockets of a handkerchief and two or three letters, which he jammed into his trousers pockets, and laid the garment on the counter. The pawnbroker looked over it and remarked: "Seventy-five cents." The man shook his head. "One dollar," said the pawnbroker, and the customer held out his hand and clutched the money. The only word he spoke was when he gave a name to be written on the pawn-ticket. He hurried out in his shirt-sleeves and ran into a saloon a few doors away. "That sort don't come often," said the pawnbroker. "He's gambling with somebody and he expects to come back and get his coat before night. Perhaps he will, but I don't look for him."

From Vienna.

A street of Vienna will be one of the attractions of midway plaisance. It is to be a reproduction of ancient Vienna at the time of Maria Therese, built in the gothic and renaissance style, with shops where the typical Viennese workers in metal, leather, amber, meerschaum, etc., will be reproduced and sold to visitors. The street will also have a Vienna cafe and concert garden, with a military band of sixty men. Viennese singers will appear daily.

GAINS AND LOSSES.

Some the hours when we sit in the shadow
That falls like the droop of a wing
O'er the nest that is naked and empty
When the fledgings have learned how to sing,
Then woe is the heart for the old time,
The time that was busy and gay,
With the world and its clamor about us,
And we in the midst of the frag.

In the shadow we count up our losses;
We creep where we marched with the best.
Oh! the ache when we try to walk softly,
The cry of our soul against rest.
And we grieve for the golden heads vanished;
Our children are women and men,
And wistful and deep is the yearning
To have them but children again.

And we fret o'er the fruitless endeavor,
The labor that satisfied not,
Till the shadow grows thicker and longer,
And the blur in our eyes is a blot
On the lingering splendor of sunshine,
That taps with its lances of light
At the shut and barred door of our memory,
An after glow radiant and bright.

Do we see nothing else but our losses,
We mourning there, fools and purblind,
With the crown and the kingdom before us,
The conflict and turmoil behind?
Shall the harvest lament for the seed time,
The bud be less blithe than the leaf?
Is there joy when the plow breaks the furrow,
And none when the hand binds the sheaf?

Oh! wings that are folded and drooping,
Spring wide in the evening's uplift:
Reach out to the stars that are showing
The skies in a silvery rift.
No day of our day is so hallowed
As that when we see, just before,
The light in the house of our Father
Shine out through His half-open door.

WILL HOBBS.

The Queer Antics of a Lean Michigan Man.

Stole Just for the Fun of the Thing—After His Arrest He Went In and Out of the Jail Whenever He Pleased.

WILL HOBBS has been heard from again. It has been years since this extraordinary character informed the people of his birthplace regarding his whereabouts. So when it became noised around that one of the boys had a letter from Will Hobbs the whole town was set to talking and bringing back to mind some of his unusual performances.

Will writes that he is in Japan now, in Yokohama, connected with the Oriental and Occidental line of steamships in a clerical capacity and doing well. He says he likes it, likes the people, and has become accustomed to the native food—not a trifling matter with Will by a great deal, as his history shows.

Did you ever hear of Hobbs? Well, you did if you ever lived in Michigan, and probably you have anyhow, only it has slipped from your memory. Will was the confoundedest fellow anybody ever saw. He came of good family, had the best possible home training, was sent to school, and learned a great deal and all that. He wasn't a studious fellow—was so quick to learn he didn't have to study much—but he always stood well in his classes and was graduated with credit if not with honor.

He was a tall, thin, lanky boy, and his physical peculiarities increased with his years. He was one of that sort of fellows who could stand up and put his foot over his head, or lie down and touch his two heels together back of his neck. He could take things out of his lower left waistcoat pocket with his right hand by throwing his right arm around his neck and over his left breast from behind—a trick no one else in school could do, no matter how thin and overgrown he looked.

Well, Will grew up to be a man and always kept his overgrown appearance. His trousers were just a little short—you know the kind—and flapped around his thin ankles as if he had come to be two or three inches taller since he bought them. His wrists stuck down below his coat sleeves, too, and his waistcoat always made a close connection.

As he aged Hobbs took to stealing. Not to make money, nor from bad associations, but just for pure cussedness, as a boy will leave his father's ripe apples alone so he can go and "hook" the minister's green ones. He was the most peculiar thief, too, that ever puzzled the police. It came natural to him, apparently, in spite of the respectability of his family, for he could lift things out from under a man's very eyes without exciting suspicion.

STOLEN FOR FUN.

Will didn't keep the articles he stole nor try to sell them. He would get in a store at night and take half the stock—how he ever used to carry it all was a wonder—and then arrange all the merchandise and stuff on a prominent citizen's front steps. He would do it so carefully that it must have taken hours.

One night he captured fifty or sixty revolvers and arranged them along the balcony railing of a clergyman who was notoriously opposed to war or the use of any kind of physical force. He'd take clocks—good, big clocks, too—wind them all up, alarms and all, and set one in each window he could reach all along a street. That trick left a lasting impression on the Lansing people, for so many waked up with the idea that the city was burning up or the end of the world had come they couldn't forget it.

Naturally in a town as quiet as this pranks of that kind created an endless amount of talk. Special policemen were sworn in and some Detroit detectives came over to look at the ground. But the tricks and thievery went on just the same until some remarks were dropped by Will Hobbs himself and they caught him coming out of a drug store with a bag full of hair and tooth brushes and on his back one of the big three-storied bottles filled with colored water that druggists have for a sign.

He never told what he was going to do with that bottle. Well, they put him in the county jail—he didn't try to defend himself and his people and friends were so disgusted that they gave him no help. But it didn't matter much; the evidence was too strong. And it seemed to make very little difference to Hobbs. He loafed around the jail, didn't get any thinner, because he couldn't, and was well liked by everybody, officers and all, from the first.

One day the jailer came in with the breakfast and found Hobbs in his customary attitude, sitting in his cell, with his chair tipped back and his feet resting on the barred window high above him. He looked over the food and said to the jailer: "That's a mighty poor morning meal for a hungry man."

"What's the matter?" said the jailer.

"Well, that's not the kind of coffee you'd give your own family, is it?" Hobbs said. "Besides, the biscuits are heavy. I believe I don't like the board here, anyway."

The jailer laughed and good-naturedly went back to get something better. When he returned to the cell there wasn't any Hobbs, no sign of him high or low. They searched the jail from top to bottom. The alarm was sent all through the town, but no one had seen him. Bolts and bars were untouched and the matter became a mystery.

One morning about two weeks afterward as the jailer was handing 'round the breakfast the same old way he jumped aside and dropped all the victuals as he passed Hobbs' old cell. There, seated just as he used to be, sat the long, thin chap, with his feet in the air.

"Got that coffee for me yet?" said he, grinning.

The jailer was so mad he couldn't talk for a minute. Then he began to blow around.

"Here, don't talk so much, and I'll tell you how I did it," Hobbs said, and the jailer was glad to get the information. His window looked down into a little court yard with a high, solid oak fence all around it. He took his custodian to the window and pointed out a barn just beyond it. He'd just squeezed through the bars around the window, reached over and caught the fence and clambered along until he came to the barn.

There he had been sleeping all the time, getting out at night and going over to his mother's house for food.

Well they put so many bars across the windows that a man couldn't get his hand through them and raised the height of the fence about ten feet.

"GOT THAT COFFEE FOR ME YET?"

After all these precautions had been taken they went to see Hobbs one morning and he wasn't there. He stayed away about three weeks that time, and then he came back just as before. The jailer almost had convulsions that time.

He explained that he had gone down and come back by way of the drain pipe. They fixed the pipe so even a rat couldn't pass, but they were all timid about Hobbs for all that. As a result the officers took him to the Ingham county jail over at Mason. They didn't give him a chance to escape, either. One turnkey slept with him at night and sat with him by day, keeping as close watch as if he were condemned to death.

His case was hurried up, too, and inside of a fortnight he had been tried, convicted of burglary, and sent to the penitentiary at Jackson for two years.

He was placed under the strictest surveillance. Just the same one bright day he was gone and the warden found a note in his cell saying he was tired of the board he was getting and had decided to find another boarding house.

A week or so afterward another letter came to the warden, dated and postmarked at Bay City. It said in effect that board was much better there than in Jackson and he was better satisfied. Similar letters came from Detroit and other Michigan points. Then they stopped and nothing more was ever heard until just the other day when word came from Japan.—Chicago Mail.

He Showed Signs.

A certain congressman, famous principally for his untidiness, was in one of the small towns of his district making a speech. During the day a couple from up the creek saw him on the street corner.

"Who's that, Hiram?" inquired the wife, who was interested in all the sights.

"Why, Marthy," was the reply, "don't you know him? He's our congressman."

"Ugh!" she exclaimed uppishly, "he wears a powerful dirty shirt."

"In course, in course," said her husband; "but, Marthy, he's got to do somethin', to show he's a congressman."—Detroit Free Press.

LEVEL-GROUND BARN.

Plans of One That Cannot Be Surpassed for Convenience.

I here inclose the plan of a level-ground barn. After having three basement barns, I have decided that for healthfulnes of stock the level-ground barn is the best. The plan of this barn is very simple and cannot be surpassed for convenience. The plan I send is of the kind that I would like for myself. Anyone building it can change various parts to suit. The floor of barn is four feet higher than the horse or cow stable floors or covered yard. The sill of the barn would come on a level with H, Fig. 1, south elevation, but is left out to show stables. Hay for cows is above them and can be thrown down in feed alley D, at as many places as one chooses. The hay can be put in at end of loft or one side. The silo is at south end of feed alley, thus making it convenient to feed either hay or ensilage. Hay for horses is about them and can be thrown down on barn floor and fed from floor or in shutes.

FIG. 1.—SOUTH ELEVATION PERSPECTIVE.

A, barn floor; C, cow stable; D, feed alley; G, silo; H, horse stable; I, hay loft above cows or sheep, 22x60, and 16 feet high; J, hay loft above horses, 12x30 and 16 feet high.

In the granary the bins are all above, and grain can be drawn from bottom in pipes. Thus a walk of 17 feet gets the grain for horses. As they are four feet below the barn floor they can never get out upon it. If you are keeping sheep, grain can be drawn in feed alley D.

The barn floor, 30x17, will hold the grain in sheaf of a small farm, say 50 or 60 acres, for which this plan is intended. Larger farms must have a larger plan, and at threshing the straw can be put over the yard. At F (see Fig. 2, east elevation), straw can be put in from floor or put in at side doors. Straw can be thrown down from room F to horses at southeast corner, or to cows or sheep at northwest corner, or be thrown down through the floor into yard below. You will also notice that horses, cows, etc., can be turned into yard from stables.

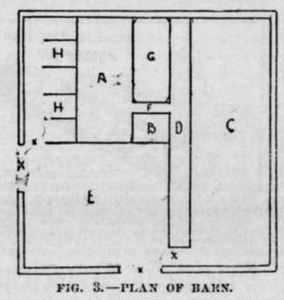

FIG. 3.—PLAN OF BARN.

The covered yard has doors at northwest and southeast corners to drive through when hauling manure. This barn is 60 feet square, so to speak, having main barn 60x20, with an L 30x40, the covered yard finishing the square. This yard should have a flat iron roof. Doors, windows and cupola can be made to suit the builders.—R. O. Halstead, in Ohio Farmer.

THE POULTRY YARD.

LET the flock have a pan of coal ashes every morning.

DO NOT give all the fruit and vegetable parings to the pigs; let the poultry have a share.

WHY cannot you secure private customers for your eggs and thus add a big percentage of profit?

IS THE house overcrowded? Thin out the poorer specimens and give the others more room. The flock will pay better.

HAWKS may be caught by putting a dead chicken on a pole and fastening a steel trap on top. Chain the trap to the pole, of course.

WOOD ashes besides setting free the ammonia of the droppings bleaches the shanks of the fowls and should not be emptied in the poultry house.

IF there are no outer sheds with a sunny exposure for the flock to frequent they had better be confined to the house. Wading in slush and standing in a winter wind do not promote health nor induce laying.

THE best of the self-regulating incubators require watching. The operator must be intelligent. An ignoramus cannot succeed in hatching chickens by machinery. Instinct will beat ignorance every time, whatever manufacturers may say.—Farm Journal.

America's Farm Population.

Statistician F. C. White, of the census bureau, says that the decrease in the per cent. of farm population since 1850 is very small; that the increase in city population is due to the relative decrease in village population, which in turn is chiefly due to the country mechanics and small factories having been absorbed by cities and large manufacturing establishments. The figures regarding farm population are doubly significant; they fail to show the drifting away from the farm that is universally believed in, and give a dismal emphasis to the fact that since 1860 the aggregate of farm wealth has decreased from one-half of the entire national wealth to about one-fifth of it. In all the years of the government prior to 1860 farm wealth had been about one-half of the total wealth, but since that date it has rapidly fallen into the place it now occupies.

ABOUT ROOT CROPS.

They Are Profitable for Farms Near the City Markets.

Many farmers have learned that good crops of potatoes are profitable when grown near enough to market to be disposed of without too long carriage. The same consideration must be regarded in growing crops of beets, turnips, carrots, parsnips and other roots. They are both bulky and heavy in proportion to their price. A good deal of hard work must go for all the money they bring. That is true also of potatoes. They are not like the cheaply and easily harvested grain crops. The roots are worse than potatoes in this, that after they are out of the ground their tops have to be cut off. Potatoes can be dug by machinery, and only need hand labor in picking up and conveying to the market wagon. Well-grown root crops, however, yield so much more heavily than do average potato crops that for those not afraid of hard work they pay better than most others. If land is good and season favorable they will, at a low price, give a large return per acre. Root crops are one of the sure ways by which an industrious man can pay for his farm. Maybe he will earn his farm while paying for it. Most do. But it is at least better than the hard work that men most afraid of labor often are obliged to do and get no return at all. If a man has enough to sustain himself while working it he may buy an acre of rich land, put it into roots in the spring, and pay for the land with the product the coming fall. It is not very likely that the price of any kind of roots will fall low enough to prevent this being done. There is never likely to be the close competition in root growing in this country that will always prevail in grain growing. Though they may not wish to grow roots for market, yet farmers should grow enough to at least make a change of feed for the stock they keep through winter. Turnips and beets are best for hogs, and are especially good for breeding sows before as well as after farrowing. Carrots are excellent for horses. A peck of them a day is worth more for each horse than the price of them in the market. Beets, carrots and parsnips will each pay better fed to cows than they will be to market. With a well stocked farm there is a home market for a large supply of roots, and if any are grown for marketing by the bushel the home market may well take the place of any other when the price is low.

VALUE OF TILLAGE.

Increased Profits Is the Reward of Concentrated Farming.

The almost universal tendency with western farmers for years has been "spreading-out" farming. Everywhere will one see farmers who, out of choice, had rather run over two acres to raise thirty bushels of wheat than to have the headache hard enough to raise that amount on one acre. There is a good reason for this. To raise thirty bushels on one acre requires skill, forethought, care, good tillage; in short, that kind of crop depends on the man as much as on the land. In the other case there would be but very little investment of the man, and more of luck and a blind trust in Providence. When a man has more trust than skill he will of course, invest that of which he has the most. Every man farms according to the measure of the man. He may not always be able to do as well as he knows, but he will try, and, what is more, he will try to keep his knowledge ahead of his hands. Every year adds evidence that concentrated, not "spread-out" farming is to be the future order of things. Concentration enriches the soil; "spread-out" impoverishes it. Concentration reduces the primary capital in land and increases its productiveness, thus decreasing the cost of production. The Irishman was right when, on hearing another speak of a certain horse as being quite speedy, he replied: "Troth, I know of a horse that'ull trot as fast as two uv 'im." That is the principle to work for. Lay out your capital in better tillage, not more acres; in better cows, horses, hogs and sheep; not more, but better ones, in acres and animals. Only in this way can true economy and a conservatism of the farm forces be brought about so as to enlarge the margin of profit. The mischef with all our products is that they cost too much to raise. This state of affairs will continue with every farmer until he sees more clearly and applies more energetically this principle of less acres and better tillage; less animals and better ones. Slowly in every farming community are a few who are beginning to graduate up and out of the low level of contrary ideas, and increased profits come to them as a reward.—Colman's Rural World.

BOXES FOR VEGETABLES.

They Are as Cheap as Ordinary Barrels and Crates.

The boxes here illustrated are the cheapest ones we make, says A. I. Root, in Handling Farm Produce, and the ones which sell best. For the ends we use six slats instead of boards crosswise, thus making them open on the ends as well as the sides. These are used for tomatoes, apples, cucumbers, etc. In fact, there is no fruit or vegetable of about this size or larger that could not be handled in these crates. They are as cheap to ship garden stuff to market in as the ordinary barrels and crates, besides being much lighter and neater. The above cut shows the manner in which all the boxes are packed for shipping.

SLATTED BOXES.

Carrots for Horses.

A limited number of carrots are very good for horses, whether idle or at work. A few pounds per day, or every few days, is the usual way of feeding them. They are not fed so much for the small per cent. of nutriment they contain as for their effect as a condiment, because they are succulent and help to keep the horse in health. Potatoes do not hurt horses or cows, but, like other roots, they are good for either in limited quantities.—Prof. W. M. Hayes.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portions of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

--Messrs. Drew, of Minneapolis shipped a carload of cattle from here, on Monday. Prices are better than they were a few weeks ago.

—The Musical and Dramatic entertainment under the auspices of the Delano Cornet band was held on Tuesday evening.

—The sidewalks are unusually slippery now-a-days, and many a pedestrian makes some awkward and rapid movements in order to sustain an equilibrium. A few fail, even then.

—Rev. Soares, "the supply" who was to preach at the Presbyterian church last Sunday missed the train disappointing those who attend services there. Preaching next Sabbath at 10:30 A. M., as usual.

—The venerable John F. Powers was seen on our streets, on Monday. In answer to the question, where have you been this winter? the following characteristic reply was elicited:

"Tarrying at Jericho Till my beard did grow."

—The I. O. O. F's. Lodge of Delano No. 80, will give a banquet and literary entertainment on the 28th inst., this being their twelfth anniversary. Programmes of invitation will be extended to all other lodges in the county, also, to the lodge at Maple Plain, and a few other invitations will be given out.

—Miss Maggie Bennett, at one time depot agent at Smith Lake, died of consumption at her home in St. Paul last week. She was buried Saturday.—Howard Lake Herald.

Miss Bennett was day operator at Delano, for a time, a few years ago and has many friends here who join her family in mourning her loss.

--A movement has been started by one of our regular cattle buyers, to change the Delano Fair day from the first Saturday after the first Monday to the second Tuesday in each month. This will allow buyers to attend the Watertown fair and drive what stock they buy to this place, where they can remain over night, attending the Delano fair, on Tuesday, and returning to the city that evening or Wednesday morning.

--The second session of the Delano-Rockford spelling contest took place at the City Hall, in Delano, on Friday evening, last. The hall was well filled; the little folks turning out en masse, while numerous friends, of larger growth, came along. Prof. Dewey called the meeting to order, and, in a few well chosen remarks, announced the object, of the contests to be the stimulation to greater efforts in a much neglected branch of study, spelling. And stated that the agreement was to spell from words pronounced, without having had special drill on them. Mrs. Beede then said that she would use words from Geography, Algebra, Geometry and other studies. That in her school she uses no spelling book, but selects from the studies being pursued such words as she thinks best. That each morning she places on the blackboard words for the day's spelling lesson. Messrs. C. J. Buckley and J. R. Beede having been chosen umpires, and the scholars of the Delano school placed on the right and those of Rockford school on the left side at the hall Mrs. Beede proceeded to pronounce, and in rapid succession the scholars took their seats. Rockford coming out ahead. Another spell down was indulged in immediately after, with the same result. The words pronounced were, mostly, Geographical names, some of them quite difficult to spell, but such as pupils of the two upper rooms of our school should be familiar with especially when some of them have been allowed to lay away their Geographies as finished in this branch some time ago. Mrs. Anna Lindsley informed us that she kept track of the words and missed five out of the entire lot. Our own seat was too far in the rear of the room to plainly hear all that was going on, and as many of the scholars spoke too low to be heard far we could not keep track of all words, but was, notwithstanding the fact that we were painfully aware of the neglect with which spelling had been treated in our school, somewhat surprised to see some of our scholars refuse to even try to spell some names of prominent places, while others spelled down on old "Virginia," "Great Britain," "Phœnix," "Alexandria," "Valladolid." Roy and Erma Wilder and Stella Jacobs stood up the longest for Delano. We are not acquainted with many of the Rockford pupils but the crowd was considerably amused when Floyd Benner was floored by that "Rhinocerous." The match certainly had the desired effect, to stimulate spelling and now most any of our young ladies and other people in town know how to spell "Baton Rouge," "Apalachicola," "Dnieper," "Kamtchatka," and similar terms. We just dare Mrs. Beede to bring her school and that list of Geographical names back here again.

—Will Jacobs has purchased Will Guptil's interest in the Danforth House and is now sole proprietor.

—Arthur Wiese called in yesterday and informed us that a bad boy had shoved him down on the sidewalk. He had quite a lip on him.

—If the Eagle's Historical narratives are as correct as her items of news, and we have no reason for believing them more so, they are away off.

--C. J. Buckley and O. L. Billings have been mentioned as possible candidates for nomination on the mugwump ticket for Village Recorder.

—The Eagle refuses to accept our challenge so courteously extended to them, to Spell Down, and says something about the primary department of the Public school. If they prefer to spell with the little fellows, we will use our best efforts to be present and get out an audience.

--Tuesday, this week was Valentine's day and also Abraham Lincoln's birthday.—Delano Eagle.

Two days behind time again. It is bad enough to cheat the newly arrived in our own village out of two days but when it comes to cutting off the two first days of the eventful life of such a man as Abraham Lincoln, its just outrageous! It must be through the Eagle's "downright ignorance."

—Baron Van Kruger met us early this morning, near the town pump, and informed us that the Eagle had mentioned him as a probable candidate for Mayor on the straight Democratic ticket, and said we could just say that "It's a tam lie! If I run on a ticket, I go on the Independent ticket." As I. Gutzwiller, Jr., has been understood to be desirous of having that honor himself it looks as if a clash were imminent.

—A meeting was held at the residence of M. A. O'Hair, on Thursday evening, for the purpose of arranging to observe Washington's birthday in an appropriate manner. Miss Rebecca White was elected chairman, Geo. W. Bolton, secretary. It was agreed that a picnic dinner be held in the City Hall. The following committees were chosen:

THE PARTS OF SPEECH.

Nouns are names of things and men,
As JOHN and WILLIAM, INK and PEN.

Pronouns take the place of names,
As SHE for Mary, HE for James.

An adjective describes a thing;
The QUIET country, BUBBLING spring.

Verbs can tell us what is done;
We READ and WRITE, and WALK and RUN.

Adverbs tell how, when and where;
NOW answer TRULY, what goes THERE?

Interjections hop right out
Before you think—as OH! NO DOUBT!

Conjunctions fasten words together,
As clear AND cold BUT pleasant weather.

Prepositions fasten words
And show their bearings: wings ON birds.

County Cullings.

In Judge Alley's court, on Monday, Geo. Young was appointed administrator of the estate of William Otto, deceased.

The Old Settlers' society is to meet in Buffalo, on the 22nd inst. The customary literary programme to be gone through with and business transacted.

Our neighbor up street, in the brick office that runs by steam, gas, or what not, is troubling herself considerably now-a-days about the Post office distribution in Wright county. At present she says very little concerning the irregularity of mails. But just wait until the change of administration comes, and if the Buffalo Journal, printed Wednesday, don't get here until Saturday night as was the case last week won't she s-c-r-e-e-c-h worse than a screech-owl though?

Our neighbor up street struck a reminescent vein this week and regaled her limited number of readers, many of whom say they take the paper because of business relations and not to depend on it for news, with some political history of former times. Give it to 'em! Give it all to 'em! Don't forget to mention the time Bill King came into the county! Don't forget to tell how a prominent politician sat at the polls with yellow tickets and white ones controlling the election! Don't forget to tell the people how the biggest half of our taxes came to be for school purposes and paying interest on $10,000 bonds for building a school house first voted to cost $6000. Don't tell it though as you did the statement about this year's receipts of the village treasurer but tell it truly.

CLEVELAND'S cabinet, so far as made up is Walter Q. Gresham, of Illinois, Secretary of State; John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky, Sec. of the Treasury; Daniel S. Lamont, of New York, Sec. of War; Wilson S. Bissell, of New York, Post Master General

An Old Settler Gone.

Rev. Thomas S. Gunn, of Montrose, died at the home of his daughter in Cumberland, Wisconsin, on Wednesday. His remains are to be buried at Montrose to-day. Mr. Gunn came to Minnesota in the fifties, and settled with a colony from Indiana, in Nicollet county, and with others, laid out a townsite near Swan Lake, where the village of Nicollet now stands, but one after another the citizens of the new village tired of waiting for the new Swan City to grow larger and it began to grow smaller until nearly all had left the place, and the project was abandoned. Mr. G. after awhile located on the line of the Great Northern, in Wright county, in the midst of a dense forest, where after a few years grew up around him, and on his land the present thriving village of Montrose. He was a mechanic of no low order and spent much time on the problem of "perpetual motion" making several machines. He was a member of the M. E. church, and spent many years as a minister, being quite an earnest, fluent preacher. He belonged to the Old Settlers society, in this county, and was on the programme me for the opening prayer at the annual meeting to be held at Buffalo, on the 22nd. He had appeared before the society many times always taking an active part but on this occasion he will have gone to that "bourne from whence no traveler returns." And others will be called on to fill his place here. He was twice married. His last wife, who was a relative of Judge Gresham, preceded him to that other land but a few months ago; where they will await the coming of a numerous family of grown up sons and daughters and grandchildren and many friends.

A Great Seed Establishment.

$1,100 FOR EARLY TOMATOES.

We are in receipt of a Seed Catalogue for 1893, published by F. B. Mills, Seedsman, Rose Hill, New York. Mr. Mills has a very novel idea in getting up his Catalogue. It is very plain, and his idea is to give his customers a very large amount for their money.

With every order amounting to $1.00 or more he allows the customer to select 50 cents' worth in packets free, their own choice, thus you see everyone gets $1.50 for their $1.00.

Among the many premiums offered for Cabbage, Onions, Potatoes, and Pansies, we might mention the Early Tomatoes. $500 is offered to any person growing a ripe one in 75 days or less from day seed is sown, also $400 to person growing a ripe Tomato in least number of days from day seed is sown, $125 for next and $75 for next.

He offers one of the finest lines of Vegetable and Flower Seeds that can be found, and prices are very reasonable.

He offers $1,500 to club raisers for largest club order and largest number of customers secured by any one person.

Last year he paid Mrs. T. B. Young, Rock City, Ill., $500 for largest order. His Catalogue is very interesting and no one who plants Seeds can afford to be without it. It gives a birdseye view of his establishment together with interior views of his Seed Houses, showing how the work is carried on, and photographs of persons who have won prizes.

His Seeds are becoming known everywhere for their excellent quality and Mr. Mills guarantees to please all his customers. After looking this Catalogue all through we would advise our readers to write for one at once, for it is free to any one applying, and try some of his Seeds this spring.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

THE HOOSIER GIRL.

Th' gal I love's a Hoosier; 'er heart is pure an' true:
'Er eyes 'r' clear an' honest, they look ye through an' through;
From out their silken lashes th' purest passions shine;
'Er cheeks 'r' soft as pansies; 'er lips 'r' red as wine;
'Er golden noddin' tresses 'r' playthings fer the wind;
'Er voice is kind as Nature's afore our parents sinned;
Artless, gentle, sparklin', modest, lovin' free;
I've jes one fault agin 'er—she's far too good fer me.

She never seen the city; she don't know what it means
Fer gals to go flirtin an' mashin' in the'r teens.
Balls, theaters an' race tracks—they ain't 'er style o'fun,
She's in her bed at dewfall an' rises 'ith th' sun.
Ye make a wrong proposal—she don't git on her ear,
She dosent guess yer meanin', 'er conscience is so clear.
An' ef ye should explain it she'll square 'er shoulders, and She'll give one look so scornful' no manly man could stand.

It aint th' country Hoosier but its the city clip
That figures in divorce suit an' in elopement trip.
Ef thar was less o,gaslights an' more o' honest sleepin,
Thar'd be fewer fathers cursin' an' fewer mothers weepin'.
It's in th' scented boudoir gals throw away their lives
An' husbands git suspicious o' more sespicious wives;
So ye kin keep yer smar[illegible] shall
Th' clear eyed, modest Hassie, th' healthy Hoosier gal.

Ziebarth vs. Gutzwiller.

Gutzy sneers about records being destroyed, but I made an affidavit that no records were destroyed while I held the office of town clerk; and when I challenged him at the time, to now also come out in an affidavit and swear that he never received any bribe from Bill King, what did Gutzy do? why backed out, said that he don't make affidavits for trifles, he knew why. Gutzy "rants" about office seeking, but it was office seeking that kept him out of the poor house. Gutzy talks about some one having the jim-jams, but forgets how often Samuel and others had to pick him up from the side-walk.

Gutzy talks about saloons being open on Sundays, but he will invariable always sneak around back doors on Sunday to get in.

Gutzy talks about economy in village affairs, but the school district which he managed paid for the last 10 years a yearly school tax of from 15 to 17 mills on the dollar, and the district is to-day in debt $10,000.00 for an $8,000.00 school house.

Verily, if any one wants to hear a prostitute preach chastity, let him send in his subscription to the Eagle.

WM. ZIEBARTH.

Old Gutzy says, I should look to the files of the Eagle for the correct date, when that barrel of whiskey was bought in St. Paul. Wrong Gutzy, wrong. It was a couple of years before you played that freeze out game with the stock holders of the Eagle it was when Gutzy and Georgie were managing the destinies of this county. It was about the same time that you and Georgie bought that keg of beer from a saloonkeeper in Franklin, and which you forgot to pay as the fellow openly charged you on the streets of Delano with. You recollect now, Gutzy.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 17, 1893.

Mr. Harrison may have had the best of motives for the manner in which he acted about the annexation of Hawaii but there is something about it which in another man would have been called sharp practice. The impression was allowed to go out that if annexation was recommended it would be by act of Congress, which would give the House as much say about it as the Senate. But this week he sent a treaty which the Secretary of State [illegible] negotiate with the Hawaii commissioners, providing for immediate annexation and leaving the legislative details to be arranged by the next Congress, to the Senate, urging in the special message which went with it that the treaty be promptly ratified.

It is argued that in favor of this railroading business that it was too late in the session to get legislation on the subject, and that it was necessary to take such action. Democrats in the House fail to see the point in such an argument. Many of them are strongly in favor of annexation, but they can see no good reason, so long as the matter will have to be completed under President Cleveland's administration, why it was not left for his administration to begin it.

Granting that to do it by treaty and not by an act of Congress was the best way, there is no getting around the fact that within two weeks the Senate of the Fifty-third Congress will be in extra session for the purpose of confirming Mr. Cleveland's nominations for the cabinet and other important positions, and that there would have been next to no delay in allowing this treaty to go over and be sent to the Senate by Mr. Cleveland, if it met with his approval. That would have been just and proper; the present arrangement is neither. It is stated that Mr. Harrison received assurances before the treaty was sent to the Senate that it would be ratified, and he feels so easy about it that he has gone duck-shooting, to remain until next week. It is, of course, possible for the democratic Senators to prevent action on the treaty at this session, but there are so many of them who have committed themselves in its favor that it is not very probable.

The official announcement of the selection of four members of Mr. Cleveland's cabinet has been much talked about since it was received. Mr. Carlisle's selection was known before and had been enthusiastically received by democrats in Congress. Judge Gresham's ability is admitted by all, by his democracy isn't, and for that reason his selection, as Secretary of State, was not received with as much favor as was that of Carlisle. Dan Lamont needed no introduction to the democrats in Congress, all of whom expect him to prove a model Secretary of War and are glad that he is to "go up higher." Mr. Bissell is not widely known among public men, but those who do know him speak in such high terms of both his ability and his democracy that his selection to be Postmaster General meets with much favor. The Republicans have been and are still trying to use Judge Gresham as a lever to create dissention in the ranks of the democratic party, but they are meeting with poor success. No good democrat is foolish enough to expect that every man selected as a member of the cabinet will be his personal choice for the place. Every student of history knows that circumstances have quite as much, and often more, to do with the choice of members of the cabinet than the personal inclinations of the President, to say nothing of other members of the party.

The advantage of having clear-headed business men in Congress was never more conspicuously brought out than when Senator Brice in a five-minutes talk explained what would be the status of the stock issued by the Nicaraguan canal company, in case the bill now pending guaranteeing the interest on $100,000,000 of bonds to be issued, becomes a law. Before Mr. Brice made his statement Senators Sherman and Teller had got into a dispute in which both used words which meant "you are a liar," but the statement was so clearly made that further misunderstanding was impossible. It was Mr. Brice's first speech in the Senate. Although this bill now has the right of way in the Senate as the "unfinished business" no one seems to expect that it will be voted on at this session, and it is certain that it will not be voted on in the House, even if passed by the Senate.

Congress, particularly the House, has made rapid headway with the appropriation bills this week, and unless something now unexpected shall transpire to prevent they will all be disposed of well in advance of the day of adjournment.

There was some talk early this week of another attempt to bring about compromise silver legislation, but the suspicion that New York bankers are trying to bring about a financial scare for that purpose makes it almost certain that nothing will come of it.

CORRESPONDENCE

ROCKFORD RECORDS.

Miss Sadie Van Eman is visiting friends in Rockford this week.

The Wax Figger show in the G. A. R. hall, Saturday evening was a grand success. There were a good many present some very hard and tiring postures were performed by those who took part and the members of the Presbyterian church can congratulate themselves for having secured "Mrs. Jarley" and her "Wax Figgers". Burlesques were given on some of the secret societies among the figures were Columbus, the Irish anarchist, Chinaman from Shanghai and Toulon—Indians, Privates of late war and several others.

Born, Saturday, Feb'y. 18th, to Mr. and Mrs. D. R. Thompson, a daughter. All doing well.

O. C. Roberts and Jno. Moore took in Delano, Friday.

It is rumored that Dr. C. B. Ames will move to Hanover, the first of March.

The W. C. T. U. will have Prof. Caton deliver a temperance lecture about March 4th. He is a good speaker and it will be well worth your time to hear

The lower and intermediate departments of the public school give an entertainment in the G. A. R. hall, next Friday evening. Every body is cordially invited.

Delano and Rockford schools are to again have a spelling contest but under different rules and management than the other two, neither school is to know from what books or what words will be spelled and every thing will be fixed without giving either school any advantages, and we trust the hard feeling now existing may be lessened and the schools become friendly.

Today is Old Settler's meeting at Buffalo. These meetings not only bring together the old settlers and commemmorate the pioneer days but also celebrates the birth of the Father of our country. Rockford is well represented to-day, about thirty-five went by train.

Mr. and Mrs. Alva Bucklin were pleasantly surprised, last Friday evening by a number of young folks of this vicinity.

Arthur George came up from Minneapolis Tuesday evening.

Jno. Kimlin went to Minneapolis, Wednesday.

Fred Darrow, Ed. Darrow and O. C. Roberts attended dance in Delano, Tuesday.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Snow keeps coming and it is about all the people can do to keep the roads broke out, consequently travel and traffice is on the decline.

At this writing, all the sick are improving.

School will close in district 102, next Friday.

O. Styner was running his saw mill, last week.

Farmers' meeting at town hall tonight.

Many of the farmers are longing for Spring. This winter has taken lots of feed.

The World's fair appropriation for the additional $100,000 has passed both houses of our state legislature, all it lacks now is the governor's signature. There was thirty votes in the Senate in favor of its passage and 22 opposed. In the House was 51 in favor and 36 opposed to its passage. Now these fellows with their drizzling idocy who voted to give the people's money away for naught, should have a newspaper photo and be presented with a leather medal made out of their grandfathers' boot top and assigned to the monkey department world's fair "Write this for a memorial in a book and rehearse it in the ears of all the people" of Minnesota from generation to generation not that their children may know how they died for their country, no, but for the world's fair.

It looks now as if the Sandwich Islands will be annexed to the United States. Chineses, Lepors, monkeys and all; some say let in Canada too. Next the devil will apply and want his Dominion annexed; no doubt the people will favor it, thinking they may grow tropical fruit.

Town meeting and the new administration is drawing nigh.

The crows are out looking for spring.

Mrs. H. L. Bowen has been on the sick list for two weeks.

W. W. Mills, of Minneapolis, was in Independence last week.

If winter holds on until late in the Spring some of the farmers will be short of feed.

One of the farmers of Independence has a hen that laid an egg with three perfect formed yelks. She is the McKinley bread.

Snow Covered Washington.

EDITOR GAZTTE: — The GAZETTE arrived at Oak Harbor, Wash., to-day after some days delay. Our U. S. mail steamer having broken some of her machinery was laid up at the City of Everett. Being on an island (Whidby), the railroad cannot reach us, so we have to depend upon the steamers for transportation.

I would have commenced this communication "Evergreen State" but we have just passed through an experience which takes off some of the EVERgreen. It snowed steadily for several days and mercury went down to as low as to 10 degrees below zero. The oldest settler never saw colder weather. And for about a week the snow was from 12 to 15 inches deep. It made us Minnesotians think of home; made us shiver too. But we survived the storm and are now having beautiful weather. The family is well and happy. J. P.

Washington, Feb. 13, 1893.

Washington's Birthday.

Wednesday, Feb'y. 22, was all anyone could ask for in the way of being a fine day. The sun shined forth in all his splendor, warming the frosty air and melting the beautiful snow which covered the ground to a depth of two feet, just a little on top, enough to make sleighs slip easily.

The stars and stripes were raised on the three liberty poles and the school house, announcing to the citizens that Washington's birthday had come.

Preparations were made at the hall for the sumptious feast which was to be held there in honor of the "Father of his Country."

The morning train brought Judge Hooker, of Minneapolis, the orator of the occasion. And farmers' teams loaded with families bearing baskets of good things and with smiling faces began to fill the hall.

Soon after noon the announcement was made that "dinner is ready" and the three long tables soon filled with people with good appetites. William Hawker asked the divine blessing, and dinner was the order for about an hour and a half, when Toast Master O'Hair called the house to order. Tables quickly gave place to chairs, which were filled with people now as anxious to partake of the literary and musical feast as they were before of the bodily nutriment.

The Delano Cornet Band in uniform, discoursed some of its sweetest strains. After which Mayor Coolen gave one of his characteristically brief addresses saying, "Now you have got to keep quiet. If you don't I can't talk very well. Have got a cold. I bid all welcome; and thank all especially the ladies for the fine dinner they have prepared.

Washington's Birthday, a chorus, was then rendered by Misses Stella Moody, Allie Rader, Grace O'Hair, Tillie Coolen, Mabel Young, Mamie Van Eman, Mrs. Dr. Shrader, Messrs. John Borrill, William Hawker, Prof. Dewey with Geo. W. Bolton, Pianoist.

Judge Hooker then responded to the toast, "The Progress of our Country," and, among other things, said: "I have numerous manscripts, but few words on a page. My time for making preparation was brief, but I felt the importance of the subject and occasion and enjoyed looking up the subject as I hope you will enjoy it. The name of Washington is to every man and woman an inspiring one. Washington was a real person, he lived in this country. We have men here who almost reach back to his time." He described a trip to Mt. Vernon, and said: "The subject is so broad that at best I can only touch here and there. The world at large has improved in this 10 times as much as in any other century. It has provided for poor and oppressed. Our Blessed Master's hand has done this." He spoke of the smallness of the territory at the commencement of the century as compared to its broad extent now, of Wright county then being a part of Louisiana, and an unexplored country, 45 years probably will cover the developement of this country purchased from France. England never lost anything in the world from modesty and failing to claim it. She tried to claim some of this country. He spoke of the then far of story mountains of railroads. Father Hennepin and other early discoverers, missionaries mostly. Of the difficulty and expense of getting grain to market and goods in return, 300 miles, from western New York to Philadelphia, transportation of a barrel of flour cost $1.25. One ton of freight from Philadelphia back to the home of the wheat raiser, 300 miles, $125.00. Now improved methods and cheaper rates. Stages were in use. Probably about this time the couplet was made:

"The rich man rides in his chaise.
The poor man walks, &c., &c."

He spoke of Governor Clinton, of New York and canal building, of how the Quaker said. "Friend Clinton don't thee think the has a bee in thy bonnet." We were called out and did not have the pleasure of hearing the balance of the Judge's able address.

Instrumental music, followed by a response by Prof. Dewey, to the toast "Delano Public Schools" were the next numbers, and we did not hear them except the closing of Professor's remarks, but are told they were excellent.

Song, Vocal Quartette.

Superintendent Lindsley responded to "Public Schools, the hope of our country." He thinks Ben. Butler was right when he spoke of educating our children to do nothing. He thinks radical changes necessary.

Song, Duet, John Borrill and Stella Moody, Grace O'Hair at the Piano.

Recitation, O. L. Billing. He said the time for preparation was short so he would give that piece just out "Spartacus to the Gladiators," which he did well.

Song, Story of Washington, Misses Tillie Coolen, Tillie Eppel and Lena Haffner.

Song, Quartette, Mamie Van Eman, pianoist, Mr. and Mrs. Borrill, Geo. W. Bolton and Mrs. Buckley.

Toast Master then announced the toast "George Washington, first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his country men," had been assigned to Rev. Davies who had been called away and that without preparation Dr. Catlin would speak on that subject. The doctor said that some one had lately spoken of Washington as a steel engraving that he was not as was probably meant but that he was a steel engraving in the hearts of every true American citizen.

Prof. W. W. Holcomb haying come into the hall, was called out and gave two of his newest and best songs.

Hail Victorious Emblem was then given.

Vote of thanks were given Judge Hooker, the Band and the ladies.

A committee was appointed to arrange for permanent society. Chairman appointed Dr. Catlin, Miss Rebecca White and C. W. Ingerson.

Driving the Cows Home.

"Lilly, it's time, go after the cows." This was always the cry all summer, and oh! how I did detest it.

In the evening after the dishes were washed, the chickens fed, and the little turkey hunted up and taken care of, and numerous other chores attended to and I had set down to finish my dolls dress, or more likely gone down to the lake shore to make mud pies, my fun would all be spoiled by a voice from the kitchen door calling "Lilly, come, it is time for you and Lettie to go after the cows," and if we did not start at once it would soon be followed by a willow switch, and if any of you have ever had any experience with willow switches, you would not ask if we started.

We generally knew where to look for the cows and some times we would have to go a couple of miles before finding them. Our path led through one of the loveliest pieces of wood, so dark and shady. I used to think it was just the place for all the wild animals I ever heard of, to hide and I expected almost any moment to see a huge black bear, or an Indian watching me from behind a tree with a skelping knife in his hand.

I used to think, when I commenced studying history, that De Soto and Balboa never had a much harder time in their exploring expeditions than I had running after the cows.

It was not so bad if we got home before dark; but sometimes the cows would wander farther away than usual we would follow the foot-path until it branched off in every direction and finally fade away altogether and still no sound of the bell reached us. What were we to do? even these dark woods with all its imaginary animals seemed more inviting than the thought of our reception at home without the cows; for we had tried it a few times to our sorrow. We would then start out and make our way as best we could through the heavy under-brush without a path or even sun, moon or stars for a guide. The trees were so thick above our heads that, had the moon been shining we could not have seen it. And in the dim twilght every stump and log looked like some wild beast and we would think we were surrounded by all the animals in Barnum's circus, and our only weapon of defence was an iron-wood rod to drive the cows with, if we ever found them.

We always watched out for a tree that would be easy to climb if we saw anything move. I never was put to the test but I doubt if I could have climbed a tree if I had seen a bear. It might have ended as the boys would say, "She screamed and fell in a swoon."

But our troubles were not all imaginary for the woods fairly swarmed with mosquitoes and deer flies which seemed twice their ordinary size, and terocious enough to devour you. Still we would plod on stopping now and then to listen for the bell when O, horrors! directly above our heads would ring out the most unearthly scream that for a few moments we would be almost paralyzed with fear.

Any body that ever heard a screatch owl knows something about it but to have it near and at such a time is not a pleasant situation.

But don't imagine for a moment that we are still standing listening to the owl. No indeed! we are half-a-mile away and still running when lo! directly in our path is a deep gully half full of water into which we tumble the darkness having prevented us from seeing it. And although I am very fond of water I must confess such a bath as this is not just to one's fancy.

"But there is no great lose without some small gain." And just as we are crawling out on the other side all wet partly from the water in the creek and partly from tears, to our great joy, we hear the cow-bell just ahead, and we know we are safe for all we need to do now is to follow the cows and they will take us home.

But those days are passed and I had almost forgotten it until Mrs. Beede said last Monday we would have to write a composition and I thought O, dear, "it is almost as bad as, driving home the cows."

PRESIDENT HARRISON will himself run up the American flag on the great ocean steamer City of New York, February 22, when that famous vessel transfers its allegiance from Great Britain to the United States. Mr. Yancey remembers that at Rixeyville Lafayette was presented with a vast bowl of eggnog, but refused to touch it on the plea that he never indulged.

THERE is no beating the icemen. The thicker the ice the shallower the water; the shallower the water the greater the prevalence of malarial fevers; the greater the prevalence of malarial fevers the more urgent the necessity for ice; the more urgent the necessity for ice the greater the demand; the greater the demand the smaller the relative supply; the smaller the relative supply the higher the price. We commend this infallible logic to the companies which are now busily engaged in making schedules for the coming summer.

IT is an interesting question how much of the general—but by no means invariable—immunity which medical men enjoy from infectious disease is due to the calmness and unconcern with which they regard such disease in relation to themselves. They forget to be afraid, and so they are clothed with an invisible cloak. It appears, then, that faith and hope are the two principles which the physician must encourage or seek to evoke in his patient, and these powerful allies may, perchance, create within him a courage which will enable him to make at least a brave stand against his disease.

The estimated number of domestic animals on farms, ranches, and the public range are as follows: Horses, 16,206,802; mules, 2,331,128; cows, 16,424,087; other cattle, 35,954,196; sheep, 47,253,553; swine, 46,094,807. The valuation of horses aggregates $992,225,185; of cattle, $905,181,984; swine, $29,542,649; sheep, $125,909,264; of mules, $164,763,751.

THE world's submarine cables now measure about 143,011 nautical miles, in 1,168 sections. The remaining 335 cables, aggregating 129,628 miles, are owned by private companies. This great length of cable has been nearly all made on the banks of the Thames, but Italy now has a cable factory, and France will soon have two. To lay and repair the cables requires the constant service of a specially-equipped fleet of thirty-seven vessels of 56,955 tons.

These exhibits, added to the usual industrial, commercial and art displays, with the superb musical and other entertainments in the big auditorium, are expected to make the exposition of 1893 the most memorable on record.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES.

Items Regarding the Doings of Legislators at the Capitol.

A movement for good roads was started by Mr. Greer, when he introduced a bill looking to that end. This bill provides for the appointment of three commissioners, one of whom shall be an experienced and practical civil engineer.

The duties of the commission are to visit the several counties of the state, investigate the leading highways, ascertain as fully as possible the relative merits and defects of our common roads and of our present system of road making, repair and maintenance of same as compared with the system of road making practiced in other states and countries; also to ascertain the location of quarries and deposits of stone, gravel and other material which, in the judgment of the commission, may be suitable and proper for the construction and maintenance of firm and durable roadways; to further inquire, investigate and determine whether the convicts confined in the penal institutions of this state can be employed in any practical way in the work of improving the common roads, or in the making of drain tile, other material or utensils generally used in the work of making or repairing common roads; to investigate generally the subject of building and maintaining of public roads, including the cost thereof according to the various best methods now in use; to make and fully report in detail the results of their investigation with their recommendation to the next incoming legislature.

Five thousand dollars, or so much thereof as is necessary, is to be appropriated to carry into effect the provision of this act.

Senator Eaton is very earnest in support of his proposition to amend the constitution to limit sessions to 60 days biennially, holding that 60 days is plenty of time in which to complete the work of a session. He calls attention to the fact that Sundays and holidays are not counted as sitting days, and that at present it is possible to remain in session 105 or 110 days, and receive pay for that time.

The people of the state are becoming greatly aroused over the railroad land taxation bill now pending in the senate. Fear is expressed that it may be killed in the senate by reason of the belief that some senators entertain that it will wipe out the gross earnings tax. Senator Morse is one who is of this opinion. Senator John Day Smith said that he had not yet made a legal investigation of the subject, but was afraid the bill would so operate. Otherwise he did not think any senator would hesitate to vote for the Markham bill.

There has not been an appointment for a meeting in the house yet when a quorum has failed to be present, which fact is largely due to the unfailing promptness of Speaker Lee. The sessions are begun at the stroke of the clock and everybody knows the coach is to start on time, and all govern themselves accordingly.

When the senate bill appropriating $100,000 for the world's fair came up in the house, there was considerable explaining done by the members regarding their votes. But the house concluded to send the measure to the governor for his signature by a vote of 71 ayes to 37 nays. Six were absent or not voting.

The house committee on legislative expenses killed the Neilson resolution on house grain investigation appropriating $10,000 therefor. The committee also recommended the indefinite postponement of the Woolridge bill, fixing the per diem of legislators.

The committee on normal schools recommended that the bill appropriating money to supply the deficit in the fund of the Moorhead normal school be indefinitely postponed. The Mankato bill was recommended for passage.

Both houses the 17th visited the prison at Stillwater.

John Day Smith has a measure he will fight to an issue. It is to prevent docking horses' tails.

The governor presented an indorsed statement of Chief Engineer Alex Nicoll of the capitol, asking for the appropriation of $1,000 to increase the heating facilities of the capitol. The bill was passed by both houses.

There are 100 more bills introduced in the house than at the same time two years ago.

A bill was introduced providing for commissioner of immigration. By the bill the first commissioner is to be appointed by the governor, but his successor is to be elected by the people at the state election in 1894. The commissioner shall have the general charge of all state lands and keep the books of record open to the public inspection. It shall also be the duty of the commissioner to encourage the permanent settlement and improvement of all sections of the state. His salary is fixed at $3,000, and he is allowed one clerk and necessary office expenses.

Senator Tawney's bill for an act to protect the people of the state of Minnesota against the importation of acute contagious diseases by the regulation of interstate emigration, provides that the state board of health may establish a system of quarantine against the introduction of pestilential diseases by the various railway and navigation companies doing business in the transportation of passengers across the borders of the state, or any vessel entering the waters of the state, to ascertain the existence of cholera or other dangerous diseases.

A bill introduced provides for a commissioner of agriculture and names Gen. C. C. Andrews for the place. The bill provides that the commissioner shall annually report to the governor on the needs and condition of agriculture in the state, setting forth methods practiced by successful farmers, and presenting pertinent information in regard to the agricultural resources of the state. Forty thousand copies of the report shall be published. The salary is the same as that of public examiner, with $1,200 for clerk hire and $2,500 for incidental expenses.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Doings of the State Law Makers at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 14.—The senate in committee of the whole had Dean's anti-pool selling bill under consideration and finally recommended it for passage after amending it to allow pool selling on race tracks. After amending the bill compelling railroads to build platforms for unloading farm machinery the same was recommended to pass. The following bills were introduced: To amend the law relating to testimony in justice courts; to amend the law relating to work on public highways; amending the laws relating to the election of town supervisors; proposing an amendment to the constitution relating to the assessment of local property for improvements.

In the house today there was a perfect flood of road and bridge bills, the members hastening to get their appropriation bills in under the rule that all must be in by the 15th of February. The total number of bills crept up past the 500 mark, and the aggregate of bridge appropriations asked now exceeds any possibilities of the internal improvement funds for years by many thousands of dollars. The extreme northern districts have the largest requests. The bill relating to blindness in children was passed. The question arose upon the adoption of the report on the senate bill appropriating $100,000 for the world's fair and the same failed to pass by a vote of 53 ayes to 35 nays. Twenty-nine were absent or not voting.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 15.—The house in the morning session received a perfect avalanche of appropriation bills, chiefly for bridges and road improvement, the aggregate for the morning hour exceeding $50,000, and previous to this there had been fully as much more. The aggregate of the whole, with the amount the internal improvement fund is now overdrawn, or against which there is an excess of legal demands, is close to $150,000. In the afternoon the house passed the world's fair appropriation bill, which now only needs the signature of the governor to become a law. The Bleecker building and loan salary bill also passed, 71 to 18.

The senate held a morning session that extended into the afternoon and then adjourned for the day. The silver question bobbed up again and the senate went on record in favor of free coinage. The railroad committee reported Glader's bill proposing a horizontal reduction of 25 per cent in freight rates, recommending its indefinite postponement. The senate by a close vote rejected the report and sent the bill to general orders, so that the victory for the railroads will not avail much. Several important bills were introduced. One creates the office of commissioner of agriculture and appoints Gen. C. C. Andrews to the place. Senator Davis endeavored to introduce a bill out of the regular order, but was cut off by an objection. It will seek to consolidate the three regiments of militia into two and do away altogether with the brigade formation.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 16.—Dean's anti-pool room bill, as amended, passed the senate with only five votes against it. As it now stands the bill prohibits pool selling, but exempts race tracks for 30 days each year. Senator Ward introduced a bill relative to the terms of county treasurers and auditors, extending the former to four years. The following bills were read the third time and passed: Glader's bill requiring railroad companies to erect platforms for the loading and unloading of grain; Crandall's bill requiring railroads to give notice whether passenger trains are on time or not; providing for changes of venue in municipal courts.

In the house a few bills were introduced. The principal ones being to prevent fraud and adulteration in baking powders; providing for extra assessments for highways; to establish uniform standard of admissions to the bar. The afternoon was spent in committee of the whole.

The substitute grain measure of Mr. Greer of Wabasha, which has become known as Gov. Nelson's bill, governing the receipt, shipment and storage of grain, was reached about 4 o'clock. Mr. Greer managed the bill and offered an amendment of importance, acceptable to the friends of the bill, which was adopted. Mr. Brules of Blue Earth endeavored to have the bill apply to flouring mills. He was defeated.

Mr. Leonard claimed the exception of the four terminal warehouses, now under state inspection, rendered the bill unconstitutional, or special legislation. He wanted the bill laid over for the attorney general's opinion. He was defeated.

The bill was made special order for the 23.

Both branches adjourned until Saturday, the 18th.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 18.—But few bills were introduce in the senate, and only two were of any importance. Senator Davis introduced his bill consolidating the three regiments of national guards into two regiments. The bill also abolishes the brigade formation, and is intended to lessen the expenses of the state militia.

Another interesting bill was introduced by Senator March of Hennepin county. It is a proposition for an act to compel manufacturers and dealers in naptha and gasoline to label their goods according to quality. There were several other bills mostly of a minor character.

There was a larger attendance of representatives than is usual on Saturday, but despite this fact not much business was transacted. Neither the house nor the senate have expedited business at a very lively rate thus far. Work has been confined chiefly to the introduction of new bills and none of the measures which are important have been even discussed to an issue, other than the world's fair appropriation. The anti-pool war has covered lots of time and is now before the house in the shape of the amended Dean bill, but nothing was done with it. Its friends claim that it is going through the house, but there is considerable question about this.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 20.—The attendance in the senate was light and the session only lasted 20 minutes. The afternoon session was long and interesting. The Davis bill prohibiting certain conditions in the standard insurance policy was thoroughly discussed and recommended to pass by a decisive vote. McMillan's bill providing that after 20 years franchises shall revert to the grantor and empowering cities to purchase the plant received a favorable recommendation; also the bill originating in the judiciary committee proposing an amendment to the constitution, limiting and restricting corporations dealing in real estate.

The house knocked out another proposed junket, that to the reform school at Red Wing. There was a long discussion, in which the line on junkets was distinctly drawn, and under the lead of Mr. Jacobson of Lac qui Parle, Mr. Greer of Wabasha, and Mr. Cairns of Hennepin, junkets to the state institutions, so far as the house is concerned, are probably ended. It is probable an effort will be made tomorrow to reconsider this vote.

Not a new bill was introduced in either house, the time being spent in committee of the whole. In the house some important bills were recommended for passage, including Mr. Wilson's bill for the incorporation of villages, the Horton bill for marking position of Minnesota troops at Calcamauga, and Mr. Anderson's bill to require trains to stop at county seats.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

The Deadly Cigarette.

The bill on cigarette smoking, recently introduced in the legislature by Mr. Kelly, was regarded as anything but a joke by the members of the Minneapolis Woman's Improvement league. They saw in the passage of the bill the fulfillment of their wishes, and they were anxious to have the bill prohibit not only the sale, but the manufacture or giving away of cigarettes. Because Mr. Kelly's bill was unconstitutional a committee of women from the league consisting of Miss Sanford and Mrs. Henry Brown, went to St. Paul to investigate the subject, and they met with an amount of success that encouraged them to believe that the bill would pass the house where it was formally introduced. City Attorney Simpson has drawn up an amendment to Mr. Kelly's bill to make it constitutional, and will present it to the proper authorities to have it introduced in both houses.

Eloped With the Widow.

Rev. J. J. Waymer, formerly pastor of the M. E. Church at Royalton, but recently the preacher in charge at Milaca, and Mrs. H. M. White, for a long time in the millinery business at Royalton, have eloped. Mrs. White was a widow, and has always borne a good character. She left suddenly on Jan. 17 for St. Paul, and the preacher left Milaca at the same time. They met in St. Paul, and from there left for parts unknown. Mr. Waymer leaves a large family, composed of a wife and four children, most of the latter grown. Mrs. White was a member of the church and a leader in church and Sunday school work. She was a woman in whom all had implicit confidence. Mr. Waymer came from the North Dakota conference and had charge only a year. He had been at Milaca only three months when he deserted his church to run away with the widow, who had about $5,000 in ready cash.

A Crazy Switchman.

He left his post, and stripping off all his clothing, ran naked along the track into the city. The police were notified and gave chase.

Sarazin turned and fled back along the track, not heeding the approaching switch engine, and was knocked down and dragged some distance. His right leg was broken and he was so badly injured that he soon died.

THE PIANO AND THE PLAYER.

How rich was the blended sweetness
That flowed from the silent keys
At the touch of the gentle fingers
That moved with a queenly ease!
Till the hearers strangely wondered
Whence the royal sounds could come;
For without the gifted player
The notes had been mute and dumb.

But at her touch there was music
And harmony, till the soul
Was borne by the rising pinions
Where the songs of glory roll.
It was not the piano only;
It was not the moving keys,
It was all in the young musician—
Her fingers—all came from these.

And yet the cold notes were needed,
And all that was hid within:
'Twas not only the player's fingers—
They could not the sweetness win.
If there had not been sweet responses
And yielding to her touch.
So the instrument needed playing,
And she needed it as much.

Alone we are mute and silent;
But if the great Master's hand
Is laid on the idle keyboard,
What music may cheer the land!
The praise must be all the player's,
Submission must be our part,
And His skill will get blended sweetness
From every yielded heart.

ON APPROVAL.

Why Lady Loddington Is Civil to a Common Man.

"What on earth d'ye call that thing?" I asked, poking with my stick at a bunch of grapes poised airily upon a brass stand.

"That thing," replied my cousin, proudly, "is the very latest Parisian fashion in bonnets."

I sank back into the little lounge that ran along the side of the room—you couldn't insult anything so dainty with the name of "shop"—and gazed upon its owner with an exclamation more profane than appropriate.

It must at once be confessed that she was a charming object to gaze at. There was an expression of wicked amusement in her large gray eyes, and the black gown she still wore in mourning for her husband—poor Jack Henderson, who was killed in the Soudan—set off the lines of her slender young figure and threw her golden hair and fair skin prettily into relief.

"Pull yourself together, my dear boy," she continued, opening the door of an old carved oak cabinet, "and I will show you something that even your crude male intellect will appreciate. If you don't say it's lovely I'll never let you inside the shop again. You may flatten your nose against the window or stroll disconsolately up and down the street in vain! No more chats, no more teas in the back room, Ronald!"

So saying, she lifted gingerly from the shelf a large hat, and, placing it upon her pretty head, turned triumphantly toward me.

It was lovely—quite lovely—a sort of arrangement in amethyst velvet and feathers to match. Being only a miserable and ignorant male, of course I can't describe it; but it was uncommonly becoming and made Nina look like a Gainsborough picture. I told her so and gushed over it sufficiently to satisfy her.

"It's my own idea, shape and all, and there isn't another like it in the world. I may possibly copy it, but I'm not sure. It depends upon who buys it. How I wish you were a woman, Ronald!" she sighed, regretfully. "I would make you buy it for Ascot to-morrow."

"I wish I were, my dear. But why don't you go and wear it yourself?"

"Gracious! and leave the shop for a whole day at this early stage of its existence! You guardsmen have no more idea of business than a baby. No, I can't go; but I hope you'll have a lucky day and a good time, and Ronald, dear, if you were nice you'd just look in one day soon and tell me what sort of day you had. Oh, and be sure you don't forget to notice what hats and bonnets people wear."

I promised to do my best and took my leave reluctantly as a large and portly matron, gorgeously arrayed, and whose features unmistakably betrayed her Semitic origin, sailed in and demanded a small "flower bonnet."

That woman in a flower bonnet! I hope, poor soul, that Nina saved her from herself.

"What are you going to do this afternoon, Ronald?" asked my mother three days later. "I wish you to come and call with me on the Vanderdeckens."

"Can't, my dear mother. Promised to go and see Nina."

Visions of Miss Vanderdecken, rich as Crœsus, but oh, so deadly dull! hastened my movements, and I was half way to Oxford street before my mother could call me back. I found Mme. Destrier, as my cousin calls herself, just parting with a customer. The hat was in her hand.

"I've sold it," she cried, gleefully; "just sold it to that nice girl for five guineas."

"Awful glad, I'm sure. But, my dear girl, I've a shock in store for you. I saw the very model and marrow of that hat at Ascot the day before yesterday."

"You couldn't, you couldn't! Who was wearing it?" she cried, sharply.

"One of our reigning professional beauties—Lady Loddington!"

"Lady Loddington!" gasped Nina, catching hold of the chair behind her. "Ronald, are you sure you aren't making any mistake?"

"I swear I'm not. She had on a frock the color of the hat, and she looked simply ripping. I paid her all the compliments I could think of in the five minutes I was talking to her."

"The cheat, the swindle of it!" cried my cousin, white with anger.

"My dear girl, calm yourself! I'm sorry for you, but great minds, as you know, will jump, and some other clever woman has had the same idea as you. Your sentiments, madam, are mine But I don't think theyshould be wasted on the mere fact that some other woman has made a hat like yours."

"She hasn't!" cried Nina, indignantly. "But Lady Loddington was wearing this very hat. Listen, I'll tell you the whole story. The same afternoon you called a lady came in beautifully dressed and asked to see some hats. I saw who she was, though I've never met her. I don't want to meet her," savagely; "One sees quite enough of her in all the shop windows."

"One does," I remarked, sotto voce.

"She wanted a hat the color of this one, so I brought it out and showed it to her and told her the price and explained why it was so expensive. 'Oh, I don't mind giving that for the hat,' she said; 'it is well worth it. I am quite in love with it, Mme. Destrier, but I dare not buy it without letting my husband see it. He is so very particular about what I wear. Could I have it sent round to-night for him to look at? I would let you know some time to-morrow whether I would take it or not.' Of course I said I should be glad to send it, and she gave me the address, and the hat went round there that evening. Last night she sent it back and said she was very sorry, but Lord Loddington didn't think it suited her. I thought it looked a little tumbled, but one has to run those risks when one sends goods on approval. She had determined to have that hat just to wear for the one day, and she was too mean to get it honestly."

"Of course you'll have it out with her—you'll expose her?" I said.

I was as angry and disgusted as Nina, who stood opposite me, with her pretty eyes and cheeks flaming with honest indignation.

"My dear boy, I would if I dared, but I can't afford to. It would drive half my customers away from me, and I must think of Hugo and Giles. They don't cost much while they are tinies, but I want to give them every advantage, the darlings, and I was left so badly off, and the business is just beginning to pay so well. I dare not run the risk of exposing Lady Loddington's meanness."

"I had forgotten your children. No, it would not do. Trust me to give her a mauvais quart d'heure, if I get the chance."

"Promise you'll be careful. Think of the little boys."

"I won't injure the dear chaps, you best of mothers."

"Well, in that case, I only hope fortune may favor you."

Fortune did favor me at last, but she kept me waiting till the autumn, like the fickle jade she always is. My chance came in this wise: My uncle asked me up to his place in Scotland for shooting, and I went. The old gentleman is a very connoisseur of beauty, and every pretty woman of note is bound to be asked up to D—— sooner or later. I got there in time to dress hurriedly and appear in the drawing-room just as my uncle was telling everyone whom he was to take in. I was introduced to some girl—I have not a notion who she was, but I gave her my arm and took her down to dinner, murmuring commonplaces on the way. The truth is, I was half famished with my journey, and my one idea was dinner. It was not until I was well on with the fish stage that I looked at my left-hand neighbor. It was Lady Loddington herself.

"I haven't seen you since we met at Ascot," she remarked, pleasantly.

She certainly is a most lovely woman, by the way. I stared blankly, and she went on with an air of well acted reproach:

"I believe you have forgotten we ever met there."

Here was my chance; I seized it.

"Forgotten! Why, I remember every word you said, the color of your gown and even the very hat you wore—the loveliest and most becoming hat I ever saw in my life."

The compliment told.

"I don't believe you do," she pouted.

"Upon my word I do. It was a sort of big affair of amethyst velvet, and feathers to match. I remember it with double force because I made a cousin of mine quite angry with the mere description of it. I don't know if you ever met her? She has gone into millinery, like everybody else. She calls herself 'Mme. Destrier.'"

I looked Lady Loddington full in the face and laid a peculiar emphasis on the name. I never saw anyone so thoroughly caught in my life. I saw in a moment that she knew I knew. She turned perfectly scarlet to the roots of her hair, and then quite white, and didn't speak for at least a moment. Then she pulled herself together, as only a woman can, and adroitly changed the subject. But she has been very civil to me ever since, much to the surprise of my friends. I am plain and uninteresting; I am not a personage; I haven't a farthing—not even expectations—and they can't make out where the attraction lies. They had better ask Mme. Destrier, of Oxford street, to enlighten them.—London Paper.

AN ELEPHANT'S BRAINS.

He Discovers the Fact That Two Half-Pence Make a Penny.

The tricks of the marvelous performing elephants exhibited in London a few years ago seem fairly eclipsed by the feats of the elephants at the Bellevue gardens, Manchester, of which, by way of example of the intelligence of brutes, Mr. George Freemantle, of Higher Ardwick, has sent an account to the Spectator. When a penny is given to one of these animals it puts the coin into the slot of a box, where, as it falls, it releases a biscuit, which the elephant takes with evident satisfaction.

Some of the visitors occasionally give the animals a half-penny, and as experience has taught them that this coin is of no value for the purpose of obtaining biscuits it is generally thrown contemptuously back to the giver. A more marvelous fact is to come.

One day a visitor gave the "baby" elephant a number of half-pennies in succession, each of which was thrown at him again as soon as received. The visitor then gave the animal two half-pennies at the same time. The animal's demeanor immediately changed. For more than five minutes he held the two coins in his trunk, rubbing them together, now rocking from side to side, and presently seeming to be pondering deeply, while perfectly still. At last he dropped the two half-pence in the box together, with the result that their combined weight gave him the desired biscuit, at which he gamboled about in a manner which exhibited extravagant delight. As yet, it appears that the baby elephant has not learned to hold one half-penny in reserve until he gets another. "In other words," says Mr. Fremantle, "he has not learned to count."—N. Y. Times.

A Bachelor's Reason.

The people of Wyoming who permit women to vote are apparently not in sympathy with the English bachelor of long ago, who got himself into a controversy on the subject of women's rights with his vis-a-vis at dinner. After proing and coning for a few minutes, the lady asked: "Candidly, sir, why do you oppose giving the franchise to women?"

"You will excuse me for saying it, madam," he replied, "but I have not sufficient confidence in their capacity to conduct government affairs."

"But what evidence of woman's mental inferiority to man can you advance?" persisted the lady.

The bachelor thought a moment, and then answered, slowly: "A simple fact is enough to satisfy my mind, and that is the frightful way in which they do up their back hair."—Harper's Bazar.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—The cost of maintaining Girard college last year was $440,652. The Girard fund now amounts to $13,286,238.

—It is said that there is not an infidel book published in the Welsh language. The Welsh are greater Bible readers than any other race of people.

—A single Christian community in India not long since sent to the London society $50, two gold earrings and one finger-ring, "the proceeds of self-denial week, and tokens of gratitude for benefits receipts."

—It is said that the first building for the purpose of the Christian religion in Tokio, Japan, was erected just twenty-five years ago, and now there are ninety-two houses in the city being used as places of Christian worship.

—The presbytery of Buffalo has voted respectfully to decline to consider overtures on revision of the confession until it can be satisfied that they have been prepared in strict accordance with the provisions of the constitution.

—The Young Women's Christian association of Brooklyn recently dedicated a very elegant new building. The assembly-room seats six hundred and fifty persons, and is named the Mary A. Brigham hall. There are eighteen class-rooms.

—The Presbyterian church South sends forth 17 new missionaries this year; during the last ten years it has more than doubled the number of missionaries abroad, having now 112 in the field, and has more than trebled the contributions, giving $130,000 last year.

—The Collegiate Alumnæ association of New York city is interested in a plan for furnishing college instruction to those who could not obtain it through the ordinary channels. Instruction is offered in French, German, English literature and the Delsarte system, and the best instructors are provided.

—Mr. Gladstone recently said: "The older I grow the more confirmed I am in my faith and religion. I have been in public life for fifty-eight years, and forty-seven in the cabinet of the British government, and during those forty-seven years I have been associated with sixty of the master minds of the country, and all but five of the sixty were Christians."

—Lake Nyassa is now one of the most prominent and promising of mission centers in Africa. There are five missions actively at work, with more than thirty stations; there are on the lake four vessels belonging to the Universities' missions, and two steamers and a sailing-vessel belonging to the African Lakes Co. Steam-launches are in preparation for the Scotch missions at Bandawe and Blantyre.

—Three years ago a college charter was granted to Mt. Holyoke seminary for girls, the pioneer institution for the higher education of women in this country. The seminary has recently further broadened its sphere by abolishing the name and office of the seminary preparatory department, and now becomes, in name and reality, Mt. Holyoke college. A large scientific building is in process of erection, and a memorial cottage in the name of Miss Mary A. Brigham, its first-elected president, will be begun when a few more thousands have been added to the fund collected by the New York Alumnæ association.

BEFORE THE STARRY EMBLEM.

Some of the Flags That Have Floated Over American Soil.

Columbus plowed with his ship the roaring deep, and, stepping ashore from his boat, flung to the spicy breezes of the West Indies the royal banner of Spain. Its romantic career upon the western world was well sustained by Ponce de Leon and Cortez. This flag first sailed upon the Mississippi, saw the dark shadows of Brazil's primeval forests and floated over the oldest town in the United States—St. Augustine. But John Cabot was the first discoverer of our own shores, and the royal George of "merrie England" had precedence of all others in the now United States territory. Then followed the lilies of the hourse of Bourbon, floating over Lake Champlain, the upper reaches of the Mississippi and upon the walls of Port Royal and Quebec. Sir Henry Hudson brought the ensign of Holland to the Rhine of America, and in 1614 this flag was hoisted over the infant city of New York.

Previous to the revolution, the English banner held sway, although the sturdy colonists insisted upon a special one for their mercantile marine. And when that agitation first commenced, the respect they felt for the motherland was evidenced upon their ensigns. But as the contest deepened into war, the banners of the various states became more expressive and pronounced.

The word "liberty" found a conspicuous place upon most of them. A green pine tree was the favorite emblem of Massachusetts, to which her state cruisers added a rattlesnake, erect, about to strike, and beneath the significant motto: "Don't Tread on Me."

Our first distinctly national flag was composed of the old colors, red, white and blue, and had stripes as now, with the crosses of Saint Andrew and Saint George in the corner. This was first hoisted in 1776. But the happy suggestion of stars as a foreground was already mooted in the lines written in 1774 and published in the Massachusetts Spy:

The American ensign now sparkles a star, which shall shortly flame wide through the skies.

And on June 14, 1777, the American congress declared for "old glory" to be composed of thirteen stripes, alternate red and white, with thirteen white stars on a blue field. This symbol has since been the recognized standard of America. It forms a happy conclusion to relate that the flag of Fort McHenry, which inspired Francis Scott Key to write "The Star Spangled Banner," is in possession of Mr. Eben Appleton, of Yonkers, N. Y., a grandson of Col. Armstead, the gallant defender of that fort.—N. Y. Ledger.

TREES AND FLOWERS.

Men cutting ice at Buxton, Me., found a half-blown water lily imbedded in one of the cakes. It was thawed out, put in a sunny window, and soon bloomed out as handsomely as any lily of July.

The Douglas fir in British America is celebrated for its strength and straightness, frequently growing over three hundred feet high. This is being largely exported to California, where it is used in place of Oregon pine.

Some seedsmen of New York have been selling bulbous plants just ready to bloom at about the price which the bulbs brought last autumn when purchasers hid them away in dark cellars from six to nine weeks in order to obtain a sudden splendor of blossoms in midwinter.

The life of trees is determined very largely by climate. Actual experiment has shown that the English oak, for instance, matures, and consequently dies, sooner in the United States than in England. The life of one of these trees across the water is estimated to be a thousand years, and in America but three hundred.

An experimenter has discovered that nasturtiums will live and flourish, but bloom sparingly, in a sunny apartment, where the temperature at night falls sometimes to or below the freezing point. It has been found, however, that those neutral tinted nasturtiums, a comparatively recent triumph of floriculture, not only need more water than the ordinary nasturtium, but also are much more sensitive to cold.

PITH AND POINT.

"Did the committee sky you, Dobbley?" "No, worse'n that; that they floored me. Sent the thing back," said the artist.—Vogue.

A Silly Question.—Harry (the barkeeper, to Empty Edwards, who has been dallying with the free lunch for some time)—"Say, don't you think you've eaten enough?" Empty Edwards—"See here, do I look like a man who has eaten enough?"—Puck.

Railway Official (breaking the news gently to the wife of a commercial traveler)—"Ahem! Madam, be calm! You won't get a penny from me. If your company can't keep its property out of danger, it'll have to take the consequences. You should have your engines insured."

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE.

Cake.—Two eggs, one and a half cups sugar, one-half cup butter, one cup cold water, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two and a half cups flour. This is nice baked in a loaf or in jelly tins.—Ohio Farmer.

Fish Pie.—Fish pie is made by using the cold cooked fish and potatoes sliced thin and parboiled; put them into the baking dish in alternate layers, season with salt, pepper and butter, cover with milk, and bake an hour.—Boston Budget.

Fried Apples.—Pare, core and slice tart apples as thin as Saratoga potatoes; make a batter of two eggs, a pinch of salt, a cup of milk and six tablespoonfuls of flour. Dip the apples in the batter, a spoonful at a time, and fry.—Eat with powdered sugar or liquid sauce.—Farmer's Voice.

To Cook Corned Beef.—Wash well and put it over the fire in a kettle of cold water, let it cook slowly, allowing half an hour for every pound of meat; if it is to be used cold, it is much nicer if allowed to cool in the water in which it was cooked. If too salt, pour off the first water after it has cooked half an hour and add more.—N. Y. Observer.

Wide Awake Athletics has a brief paper on "Handling and Training a College Baseball Team," by Captain "Laurie" Bliss, of Yale, and a description of "Hare and Hounds Runs," by David W. Fenton, 2d, of Harvard. "The Real Casabianca," the hero of Mrs. Hemans' poem, as told by Henry Bacon. Mr. Bacon's picture of Casabianca and his father is a splendid frontispiece.

Gentlemen;—I desire to make a brief statement for the benefit of the suffering. I had been afflicted with catarrh of the head, throat and nose, and perhaps the bladder for fully twenty-five years. Having tried other remedies without success, I was led by an advertisement in the Sentinel-Democrat to try Hall's Catarrh Cure. I have just finished my fourth bottle, and I believe I am right when I say I am thoroughly restored. I don't believe there is a trace of the disease left. Respectfully,

DELANO DIARY

—John Jacobs, of Greenwood, came over, on Monday and assisted his son. William, of the Danforth House, to move into his new home.

—Secure THE WORLD ALMANAC, published in New York. As much useful information as can well be crowded into a book of its size, over 400 pages. Sample copy on exhibition at the GAZETTE office.

—We are informed that the hearts of several of Delano's mothers were severly wrung a few evenings since by the arrival home of their sons, in the dead hour of night, dead. Drunken sons; dead hour of night; dead drunk! It is not right, boys. It is entirely wrong. Try and do better.

—The Cosmopoliton Magazine is now numbered among our exchanges and is highly appreciated. For mechanical ingenuity, as well as editorial ability the Cosmopolitan ranks in the first row today. Though younger in years than many of its cotemporaries it is becoming as widespread and useful in imparting knowledge to the world as any of them.

—Persons who wish to visit the World's Fair or to read understandingly concerning it should avail themselves of the opportunity of securing THE WORLD ALMANAC which has maps of the Fair Grounds and of the city of Chicago with complete instructions concerning Railroad, street cars, banks, telegraphs, churches, amusements, parks and other things you will wish to know about. The GAZETTE, one year and THE WORLD ALMANAC for $1.18. Get them.

—The village election is to be held on the second Tuesday of March, which will be the 14th. It is the privilege of every male citizen of the United States over the age of 21, who is not a criminal or an idiot to cast a ballot for the man and principles of his choice. It is not made a part of the law, as some would have you believe that only taxpayers and moneyed men or property owners have this right. As the law now is if you can neither read nor write, if you do not own property, even if you owe money to some broker or money lender your vote is your own to do as you please with, be out and cast it for men you feel you can trust to handle village affairs.

—Should one of the aspirants for the high and honorable position of Mayor of Delano succeed in being elected to that position, we would, no doubt, through his penchant for such things, immediately have a sinking fund established, in an Artesian well. Perhaps the rocks in Crow River, adjacent to the village, would be hauled, the contract being let to the lowest bidder, who could give bonds, onto Lewis' hill where they would be nicely piled up, making a fair monument to the memory of the builder of the Artesian well, while, according to his theory, "the pressure on the earth" would cause the sparkling water to gush forth in abundance and wend its way down to thirsty villager's residences in all parts of the city, and perhaps, to flow with sufficient force in its upward course to turn the wheels of our new paper manufactory. And in again seeking its level, as water will, it may be used for turning the cranks in the brick establishment where the Eagle has her aerie. Perhaps all the "property holders" and "tax-payers" and other monied individuals, may be invited out to stand upon the hill for the purpose of first testing the theory, in which case, we apprehend it would at once be pronounced a failure and another scheme be inaugurated for the "sinking fund." At any rate we would expect the "sinking fund," "Artisian well or no Artisian well," "Law or no law."

—Sheriff Gay, of Winona, arrived in town on Saturday morning and enquired for John Renswick whom he soon found at his residence, on Franklin Avenue, where he has a furnished room, reserved for his own use, renting out the balance of the house, and served a warrant on him charging him with abducting one Mary Porolilz, a girl of less than sixteen years of age from her home, in Winona, for immoral purposes. The girl was found with him where she had been since Thursday evening having arrived on the evening train with him. Renswick claims she asked him to bring her away from Winona, and that he did, and that he wished to keep her and send her to school. The girl tells about the same story and says she wished to leave home because her foster brother kept telling her to go away and stay. She says she asked Renswick to bring her. The sheriff left on Saturday evening's train with both Renswick and the girl; Renswick to appear before the Municipal Court of Winona. He paid his and the girl's passage to Winona and expected to return to Delano, on Tuesday. He said he would try to get charge of the girl who was adopted by Proltizk when young having been taken from a convent. Renswick is about 40 years of age and divorced from his wife.

The roads are awful rough.
Going is very tough.
If it is not enough
Call on Arup & Hough.
And this is not a pough.

—Fresh Oysters at C. H. Green & Co's Grocery.

—Call at Miss White's for a fascinator left at the hall on the 22nd.

—Call at this office for a story book, found near Jacob Henn's place.

—Work is being pushed on Cyrus Chapman's new residence, in North Delano.

—We are informed that Mrs. Ole Swedeback has been granted a divorce from her husband.

—Will Guptil says houses to let in Delano are a scarce commodity, and Will is good authority.

—Some of the late Mrs. Hannah Murphy's heirs and the administrator, I. Gutzwiller, Jr., visited Buffalo, on Probate business, on Monday.

—Ernest Kurtz and wife Sundayed in Delano. Ernest intends going into the blacksmith business on his own hook, at Howard Lake, having rented the shop of A. W. Clark, with whom he has been working.

—One of our enterprising merchants with his wife and baby took a ride a few days ago and when near Maxfield's residence took a very neat and graceful turn over in the deep snow very much to the amusement of the by-standers.

—Rev. W. T. Hobart, son of the well known Chauncey Hobart, and who has been ten years a missionary in China, delivered an interesting lecture at the M. E. church last night. He will be at Buffalo on Monday evening. Turn out and see him and his curiosities.

—Mrs Jurley will give her "Wax Figger Show" in the City Hall, Delano next Tuesday evening, March 2nd. The entertainment met with success in Rockford and is given by people from that place as a church benefit. 25 and 15 cents is the price of tickets, which will be on sale at Wittman's drug store. No extra charge for reserved seats.

—We have frequently been told by merchants and by saloonkeepers that, as they work all week they would be glad, like other people, to have one day in the week for rest. To keep Sunday. But as their neighbors did not observe the day they, in order to keep up, financially, had to do business on Sunday. We are of opinion that if the law closing business houses on Sunday were rigidly enforced there would be more fault found about it among customers than among the salesmen That it would be a credit to our town to close up business on Sunday, there is no doubt. And that if those who favor closing business on Sunday would first cease to labor on that day a step in the right direction would be taken is equally certain.

—The third contest and the one to decide the championship between Rockford and Delano schools is to take place at Rockford, on Friday evening March 3. We understand the Delano scholars are to go to Rockford immediately after school is dismissed, and have their suppers, and spell in the evening. Prof. F. H. Johnson, of Rockford, and C. J. Buckley, of Delano are to umpire and Prof. J. A. Wharton, of Buffalo, to pronounce words from new spelling books which have been sent for, and with which neither school are familiar. $5 is to be paid to the best speller of both schools. This means business. A lively time is anticipated, and nothing but good feeling to prevail.

Personals.

Al Kurtz is home this week on a visit, from Wisconsin.

Sam Cutter and his best girl visited Mound City last Sunday.

Miss Mary Bauman left for the Twin cities, Monday morning.

Miss Mossberg and Miss Lyons, were among arrivals in town this morning.

Menster Upgren, of Silver Lake, is night man at the depot, for the present.

Mr. Nolan, of Waverly, attended the county band convention here today.

Will Prestidge and family, of Rockford made Delano a visit during Monday's storm.

A. Lawrence, Wm. Rieck and F. Koppermar, represent Albion at the band convention here today.

W. H. Frazee has moved back to town. He occupies the Peter Johnson property, on 4th street.

J. D. Brandon has again taken up his residence in our village. He lives in the Sosnick building.

Miss Hannah O'Leary, of Minneapolis, is visiting her brothers and old friends in Delano today.

S. E. Farnham formerly of the Alliance Standard, Willmar, has brought his family to town for a few weeks' visit with friends.

Sam Pape much against his will, was transferred to Breckenridge for a season to take charge of the station on the Great Northern

A. G. Sexton, of Cokato, passed through town on his way to Buffalo, on Tuesday. Al, used to foot it to Old Settlers' meetings but now he goes on the cars.

Among Delanoites attending the Old Settler's Association, at Buffalo, on the 22nd., were Mr and Mrs. Peter Church. Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Young, Dell Young and Miss. McCalpin, and William Ziebarth and C. J. Buckley.

Rev. Davis and a friend by the same name from the County-seat, on their way to attend the Epworth League convention at Howard Lake, made the GAZETTE a pleasant visit this morning. They say "walking is hard."

Among those from abroad attending the Conzet dance, on the 21st, were Misses Haefer, of Hanover; Frank Brasie, of St. Cloud; Frank McKee, of Watertown; Will Sleight and O. C. Roberts, of Rockford; John Bradford, of Maple Plain.

—I. O. O. F. will hold their twelfth anniversary here on Tuesday.

—There will be a sociable at the M. E. parsonage, Saturday evening next. All are invited.

—Several severe cases of Tonsilitis have interested some of our citizens a part of this week.

—The Eagle says "A Knowledge of Botany is about as essential as a thorough mastery of the lingo of the Fiji Islands" And yet we understand that Botany is one of the branches required of high school students. Made so by men who have made a study of what a scholar should know. Who is the better Judge? Educational authorities, or a man who does not scientifically know "beans when the bag is open." Or is the editor in chief of the noble bird so highly impressed with the importance of learning the languages of Islands of the sea on account of the bouncing young widow who is queen of the Hiawaian Islands? Does he contemplate negotiations with the Queen.

—Quite a good joke on several persons is the result of Judge Hooker's coming here to speak on the 22nd. First as the time for the arrival of the morning train drew nigh M. A. O'Hair who had met the judge in Minneapolis and invited him to come out and speak to "our people" began to have misgivings, as to the judge's understanding him rightly; knowing that the judge had met him at Buffalo at court more than any place else, and fearing that he had not explained to the judge where he was to come, and would, thinking his residence was Buffalo, go there to speak, hitched up his team and drove to Rockford station to intercept him, and bring him here. Dr. Catlin went to the train here and met the judge who had understood things correctly, and who was not to be switched off from talking to Delano's, notwithstanding, Howard Lake's sole Attorney, Frank Latham who happened to be on the same train, had been trying all the way from Minneapolis to make him believe that Buffalo's old settlers' meeting was the place of his destination.

TEACHERS' EXAMINATION.

SPRING SERIES, 1893.

Public examination of teachers for Wright county will be held as follows:

At HOWARD LAKE,	March 7th and 8th.
At DELANO,	March 7th and 8th.
At BUFFALO,	March 7th and 8th.
At MONTICELLO,	March 10th and 11th.
At ANNANDALE,	March 14th and 15th.

It will be observed that examinations occur at three different points on the same days. Each examination will occupy two whole days opening at 8:30 a. m. No teacher will be allowed to enter the examination after 11 o'clock a. m. of the first day, and then only on rendering a good excuse for being late, and all teachers are expected to be present at the opening of the examination. These examinations will be conducted pursuant to the state rules and regulations and teachers will need the full allotted time to do themselves justice.

At two points I shall have my examinations conducted by deputies; this step is unavoidable as the dates for examinations are fixed by the state superintendent. If, on trial, this plan proves unacceptable to the people of Wright county, we will go back to the old method.

F. H. LINDSLEY,
County Superintendent.

I wish to announce to the public that I hereby give to my son, Frank, who is a minor, his time and that I will neither claim his wages nor pay any of his debts, hereafter.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing use, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

PLEASANTRIES.

WHAT JOHNNIE LEARNED AT SCHOOL.

"And what did Johnnie learn to-day?
His loving father said,
As Johnnie stood beside him
Before he went to bed.
"Did he learn to read his lesson,
And the hardest words to spell?
Did he learn to add a column
And do his tables well?"

"We didn't have no reading,"
Replied the little son,
"But we made some clay bananas,
And I tell you it was fun,
And we couldn't have no spelling
'Cause it took an hour or more
To pick up all models
And the clay from off the floor.

"And then we had singing.
And it took an awful while
To learn to hold our hands up—so—
And smile a pretty smile,
And we didn't have no writing
'Cause the girls had got to sew,
But the boys we didn't mind it;
As we'd lots of clay to throw.

"And then we had some numbers,
But even that was fun,
For the exercise professor
Came in before we'd done,
And I tell you," added Johnnie,
"I think a boy's a fool
Who'd rather stay at home and work
When he can play at school."
—Penelope Froebel.

Democratic Clubs.

The National Association of Democratic clubs are out in a ringing address to the voters of the country to organize and to maintain Democratic societies throughout the land, for the purpose of better acquainting the people with the needs and rights of the government of the people, for the people and by the people. This is the proper way to show our belief in what we voted for. We have elected a President, a United States Senate and a Congress, for the express purpose, almost, of re-arranging the tariff system doing away with the protective idea, and raising revenue enough only, for the uses of the government, economically administered. Societies in every county, and village, would aid in keeping before the law makers the promises made; and keep weak kneed members from shrinking from their duty, under the heavy pressure that will, doubtless, be brought to bear, by the beneficiaries of protection. Let us organize, thoroughly, and have peace and harmony in our ranks. Let us place our cleanest and best men in the front ranks when opportunity presents, and stand by them, regardless of the scoffs and sneers of those who have successfully used those influences before to the discomfiture of our party.

NORTH DAKOTA has done herself proud by sending W. N. Roach, of Larimore, to the United States Senate. He is a Democrat and being in accord with the administration will of course be able to secure more favors than would a senator of opposite political views.

GROVER CLEVELAND is said to have already begun the veto business, and to have refused to sanction the programme of being hauled around the city of Washington by four black horses with white harness. Also to have put himself on record as opposing the use of the Pension building for a Sunday dance in connection with the inauguration ceremonies.

INAUGURATION of the President of the United States takes place in Washington to-morrow. The incoming administration will be:

President, Grover Cleveland.
Vice President, Adlai E. Stevenson,
Sec. State, Walter Q. Gresham,
Sec. Treas., John G. Carlisle,
Sec. War, Daniel S. Lamont,
Sec. Navy, Hilary A. Herbert,
Sec. Int., Hoke Smith,
Sec. Agr., J. Sterling Morton,
Postmaster Gen., Wilson S. Bissell,
Attorney Gen., Richard Olney,

WASHBURN'S anti-option bill licensing monopolies to handle grain has gone where license bills should go. License is wrong, whether to buy grain or sell whiskey. If it is right to do either then all should have the right. If it is wrong to do either it does not right it to grant license. License law are destined to be relegated to oblivion in the no distant future. The very idea of a man being obliged to pay an enormous license for the privilege of doing business while his neighbors do business free is wrong. It is wrong in the grain business as it is wrong in all other business.

SOME of the city papers have been denying the charges that there is any kind of a deal in flour in the cities tending to keep up the price and excluding the product of country mills from their markets. We don't believe all our country millers are liars, neither do we believe they are so green, even if they do not live inside the city limits, of our states metropolis, as to not understand the situation. And they persist in saying that it is only by the utmost difficulty and trouble in hunting up customers not tied up, to take their flour that they can find a market.

CLEVELAND'S appointments seem to give satisfaction except that a few of the Democrats and a good many Republicans think he might have found an older Democrat than Judge Gresham. If, as reported, Bob Ingersoll is to be appointed minister to Germany there will be a still bigger dissatisfaction. This time there will be a good many Democrats among those not approving the appointment. Not because of their desire to retain him in this country. But because of the fact that some Democrat could fill that position as creditably. And the Democrats deserve to have the appointments from their ranks. And in the appointment of Judge Gresham, enough has been given to those lately opposed to Democratic beliefs. We don't think he is just the Bob we want.

Diphtheria.

Diphtheria has been carrying off many victims just outside our county lines this winter, and is liable, at any time, to make its appearance in the home of some of our readers. It is one of the most to be dreaded diseases with which we have to contend, and every precaution should be taken to guard against its spread. Children should not be allowed to visit neighbors where "sore throats" of any kind are prevalent. People who have symptoms of the disease should be, at once, isolated from the remainded of the family, as others are almost sure to come down if all are allowed to remaain in the sick room. Carry the little sufferer into a comfortable upper room, where possible. Keep the temperature even and secure the services of the best medical skill, the sooner the better.

It is usual for the patient to complain of headache, vomit, chill, have fever, followed by sore throat, occasionally sore swelling behind the angle of the lower jaw. These symptoms may all, or only part, be present. Some are so prostrated at first, as to tremble, quite severely. The disease is very infectious and contagious usually attacking all the children in a family, where no precautions are taken to guard against it. When the first patient is at once isolated from the balance of the family they may escape, provided proper precautions are taken. Do not depend on steaming the room with turpentine or any such thing, but have compitent medical aid at once. All are not alike, and different treatments may be needed. Do not rely on what cured another case, as this one may need entirely different treatment. Some cases have apparently more local trouble than others and if their throats are properly swabbed, the diseased membrane alone being touched with nitrate of silver they will almost immediately begin to improve, and go on to a rapid recovery. Others may be almost free from membrane in the throat, requiring no swabbing or use of caustics; yet they may be so overcome with the poison as to resist all efforts for their relief. Most if not all cases, do better, if given plenty of nourishment from the very start. Milk is best for those that like it, where it is drank freely from the outset it appears to keep up the strength and the better enables the patient to fight the disease. For the average case milk is better than alcoholic stimulants and is more readily taken, in small quantities, often repeated. Where the powers of life are nearly exhausted some times alcoholic stimulants, as the best brandy or whiskey will help tide the patient over a sinking spell, whether better than a good dose of Quine we are not quite sure.

Patent Medicines.

Patent medicines have come to be a great nuisance in this country. Their sale is pushed by local and traveling agents. And their advertisements are strewn broadcast throughout the land. Pamphlets giving a list of the diseases that certain nostrums will surely cure, and a list of symptoms of disease, can be found almost in every house. The diseases claimed as curable by some of these advertisements every sensible person knows, have long since been placed, by the ablest medical men, as beyond the reach of any known remedy. Besides many have known of neighbors, friends, or relatives, who have, after every vaunted remedy had been fairly tested, passed into the great hereafter. The list of symptoms are so made up as to catch almost every one. Scarcely a person but has experienced at least some of them. And, where they are not proof against being humbugged, they fall easy victims to the patent medicince vendors. Many people are surprised to read of the numerous sudden deaths, that are daily occurring about us. Is it not surprising to know that there are not more of them, when we come to learn of the frequency with which people with imaginary illness, or, ailments about which they know nothing, partake of patent medicines made up of, in some cases, powerful drugs, concerning which, they know no more? When children are sick they are frequently given patent medicines until they grow alarmingly ill, when a physician is called, who, now-a-days, generally makes it a point to enquire first—"what have you been giving the patient?" And, if it happens to be patient medicine with the analysis of which he is unfamiliar he must sit down and watch the patient, on the "expectant plan," expecting the effects to soon wear, off, when he can tell what the real trouble is. Or, if the symptoms of poisoning by some drug are so plain as to warrant, he may administer eliminative agents, to aid nature in ridding herself of that against which she is rebelling, in so unmistakable a manner.

People should be as careful of the lives of their human friends as they are of their friends among the lower animals. When a horse or cow gets sick so much money is thrown in the balance. If the animal dies so much goes out of pocket, seems to be the reasoning with some, while they allow their families frequently, to suffer untold agonies and rely on patent medicines until too late for human skill to avert the coming disolution of soul and body, when were it not for the tinkering with things with which they were not familiar science might sooner have been called, and the then ineipient ailment have been out short at its outset. Like intoxicating liquors, cigarettes tobacco and opium so long as people buy them there will, doubtless be sufficent in the market to supply the demand.

I. O. O. F. 12th Anniversary.

Notwithstanding the severe storm of Monday and the almost impassible condition of the roads on Tuesday, the 12th Anniversary of the formation of the Odd Fellows lodge at this place was attended by a large number of visitors. The programme was carried out. Opening ode by the audience; prayer, by Chaplain J. R. Davies; music; address, by Dr. A. K. Norton, Grand master; music; history of Delano Lodge, by F. H. Lindsley; music; address, by A. L. Bolton, Grand Secretary. The G. S. claimed one reason why the I. O. O. F. had lodges was because there is an opening for them; that they do good. They help each other and lighten the burdens of others. Their object is amelioration of human suffering. He gave statistics to prove their ability and willingness. Remarks for the Good of the Order were next in order and visiting brothers were called on to speak, O. Styner, of Maple Plain Lodge responded. The meeting was then adjourned for dinner, after singing the closing ode. After the other exercises the band headed the march to the City Hall, where one of the finest dinners of the serson was served to all, while the Delano Cornet Band made sweet music on the platform. Some of the airs being rather lively for time to eat by.

The occasion was enjoyed by all. The Grand Secretary was for starting a Rebecca Lodge at once but the matter was postponed for future consideration.

Had the weather and the roads been fine it is hard to tell what would have been done with the crowd of people that would have been here. As it was the tables had to be spread the second time. Dinner over the crowd returned to the I. O. O. F. Hall for a social visit.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 24, 1893.

The financial situation continues critical, but there is little probability of the present administration doing anything to relieve the strain. At a cabinet meeting this week Secretaries Foster and Tracy took high and patriotic ground in favor of the issue of bonds to increase the reserve, arguing that it was neither right nor just for this administration to turn the Treasury over to the democrats in a crippled condition; but Mr. Harrison and the other members of his cabinet took a narrow, partisan view of the matter and refused to sanction an issue of bonds. It is conceded that Secretary Foster has the authority under the law of 1875 to issue bonds, but it is not believed that he will use it as long as Mr. Harrison opposes it, although personally he is in favor of it.

There is to be a big fight made in the House against the Sundry Civil appropriations bill, passed by the Senate this week, because of the Sherman amendment thereto, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $50,000,000 3 per cent five-year bonds, for gold to increase the Treasury reserve. The fight is to be made by the populists and some of the free coinage democrats, and if it results in the defeat of the bill, as many think probable, an extra session will necessarily have to be called.

The first annual convention of the Bimetallic League of America, a free-coinage organization, was held here this week. It was largely attended, all of the most prominent populists and a number of democrats taking part therein

The first all-night session of the House during the present session was held this week. It was brought about by fillibustering against the bill providing for the use of automatic car-couplers by all interstate railroads. The bill was not passed, but is to come up under a suspension of the rules next week.

Senator Gorman has manfully, although unsuccessfully, fought for economy in the appropriation bills ever since the Senate began their consideration. He told the republican Senators this week that they seemed determined to pile up the appropriations for the purpose of compelling the democrats to impose new taxes or increase those already imposed upon the people in order to meet the obligations of the Government, and he thereby "called the turn" on the republican policy during the present Congress.

Few people know that there is a colored chaplain in the regular army. There is, however, and he has just been given a very fat detail by the War Department—duty at the World's Fair. It would take a very smart individual to tell what will be the duty of an army chaplain at the World's Fair, other than to kill time between pay-days. It has been suggested that this detail was made because the troops at Fort Bayard, New Mexico, where the brother in black is now stationed wished to get rid of him. Anyway, it's a snap for him.

The cheekiest thing ever known in political circles has been undertaken by the republican chiefs of divisions in the government departments here. They have prepared a petition addressed to President Cleveland asking him to retain them in office by extending the Civil Service rules to the positions they hold, and are now trying to obtain the signatures of clerks in the classified service thereto. Just why any clerk should sign it is more than I can understand. The republican clerks should be well satisfied if they are allowed to retain their own places, without trying to retain their republican chiefs; and there is certainly no good reason why any democratic clerk—there are not over-many of them in office anyway—should be willing to sign any such an absurd petition. If your correspondent had the power every man who signed this petition would have his official head chopped off quicker than you can wink.

There is no longer any ifs, ands or buts about the Senate of the Fifty-third Congress. It will be democratic. This has been, of course, expected ever since last November. Still, it is gratifying to know that it is an absolute, rock-bound fact.

When so good a republican and ex-Union soldier as Senator Hawley expresses the wish, on the floor of the Senate, that the new administration will give the pension system a thorough inspection and root out the frauds, which he will not be surprised if they find, it is time for damagogues to sing low.

The new cabinet is complete. The selection of Representative Herbert, of Alabama, for Secretary of the Navy, and Mr. Richard Olney, of Massachusetts, for Attorney-General, was well received by democrats in Congress. Mr. Herbert has been a favorite with Congressman for the Navy portfolio from the first; he makes the third southern man in the cabinet Mr. Olney is not so widely known, except among lawyers, but those who do know him say that he is just as good a democrat as he is a lawyer, and as a lawyer he is in the front rank.

CORRESPONDENCE

ROCKFORD RECORDS.

Everything blockaded by snow. Trains and stage routes were tied up, Tuesday.

March comes in like a lamb. Perhaps February going out like a lion may save the bad weather predicted by the old saying for March.

It is with regret we announce the death of Mr. A. Rutherford, of Independence, who after a long life of usefulness passed to the "bourne from which no traveller returns," Monday afternoon, 4 o'clock. The funeral was held today (Wednesday) at the Presbyterian church at 2 o'clock, Rev. H. A. Noyes, of Buffalo, officiating. The remains rest in Elmwood cemetery. Mr. Rutherford was among the oldest settlers in the big woods and was near 87 years of age he leaves a family who are mostly grown up. The family have the sympathy of the entire community in their sad bereavement.

Mr. W. S. Culver left Monday for Wellsborough, Penn.

Geo. W. Florida, O. C. Roberts and Geo. Higgins and others turned out, Tuesday, and plowed out the streets and roads to the station. If every one who has a team would do likewise half a day's work would give us good roads.

The Delano school will spell with the Rockford school, next Friday evening at G. A. R. hall, Rockford and it is expected to be quite interesting as prizes have been offered to the best speller. There is to be a program rendered. An admission fee of 10 cts. will be charged those who do not take part.

The young folks are expecting to have a little social dance immediately after the spelling school.

Miss M. Harvey visited Rockford this week.

Mrs. A. D. Hoar, of Camden Place, visited Mr. D. R. Thompson and family the past week.

Mrs. M. J. Allen, of Minneapolis, visited relatives and friends in Rockford a few days last week, returning home Monday.

Mr. G. G. McCrory and Miss Lottie Walker were united in marriage at the Breck Memorial chapel at Rockford, Wednesday afternoon. Rev. F. R. Millspaugh, of Minneapolis, preformed the service. The bride is well-known in this vicinity having attended school in Rockford a number of years. Their many friends join in wishing them much joy and happiness.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

This is the last day of our winter months for which no doubt many are very thankful. In a little while we expect Spring.

During the travels of the children of Israel in the wilderness they had 42 encampments. No doubt they journeyed from place to place on account of Sanitary purposes as much as any thing else; but, certainly, they did not have snow five months in the year, with drifts, 4 feet deep. No, not even sleighing.

Many are looking and longing for Spring

Only a few more days now until we will have a new administration. The leaders of our country will exchange places with the common citizen and we hope all may be for the best.

The roads through the country are not very good. Filled up with snow most of the time. But they must give away soon to the warm sun.

Bloody Kansas has on the war paint again. Guess she was righly named nearly 10 years ago by being called bloody Kansas. Hennepin county is also on the war path, over assistant superintendent of schools and at this writing is hard to tell where it will end. Mr. Shayer has filled the office of assistant for two or more years with credit and it seems as if he should not be set down on quite so hard.

E. L. Kingsley's school in district 102, Independence, closed last Friday, with appropriate exercises in the evening. There was quite a number up from Long Lake.

The beautiful snow still lingers and gives travelers much trouble when they happen to get off the road, but no doubt the snow will leave sometime between now and dog days.

After adjournment of our state legislature, the members contemplate an excursion to Chicago or World's fair grounds, singing as they journey.

"Rumbling over bridges,
Whizzing through the mountains.
Buzzing o'er the vail
Bless me; this is pleasant,
Riding on a rail."

"High and loly people,
Birds of every feather
On a common level
Are flocking together."

And no doubt they will be admitted free of duty when they inform Peter at the gate that they represent the great State of Minnesota and the $150,000 appropriation.

It is reported all the sick in this neighborhood are getting better.

A Chinese missionary lectured at M. E. church, Armstrong, last Friday evening. It is reported he raised 20 or 30 dollars for missionary fund. Our government prohibits Chinese emigration to this country and yet our money is helping to Christianize them. But perhaps it's all right.

THE COSMOPOLITAN offers fifteen hundred dollars, in four prizes of thousand dollars, three hundred dollars, one hundred, and one hundred dollars, respectively, for the four water colors which shall be chosen by a committee from such drawings as may be submitted by the artists of the United States or Europe on or before twelve o'clock on the first day of December, eighteen hundred ninety-three. The subjects to be selected from the life of Christ, taking those scenes which teach in the highest forms the lessons of love, patience, humility and forbearance, with fidelity, as far as may be, to the actual surroundings and conditions of the period The treatment should be calculated for single page reproduction in The Cosmopolitan, in size five by eight inches. The subjects to be suitable, as far as possible, for use in stained glass for church or cathedral. The originals for which prizes are awarded will become the property of The Cosmopolitan. The drawings should be shipped securely packed and addressed: "Submitted to Art Committee, Cosmopolitan Magazine, Sixth Avenue and Eleventh Street, New York," and in the upper left-hand corner: "Not to be opened before the first of December, eighteen hundred and ninety-three."

MRS. CUSTER attended her husband in his camp life for twenty years, moving from fort to fort, but she says he never confided his military plans to her.

ENTOMOLOGISTS are acquainted with one hundred thousand species of insects, yet there is not a known expert who will not perspire and swear when a tramp June bug happens to get inside his collar.

EDISON prefers women machinists for the delicate details of his electrical inventions. He says they have more fine sense about machinery in one minute than the most of men in their whole lifetime.

BOSTON still maintains her supremacy as an art center. The æsthetic student who painted John Harvard's statue red has a worthy successor in some unknown impressionist who has heightened the effect of Charles Sumner's statue by daubing it with blue paint.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S wealth is now estimated at £5,000,000, exclusive of landed estates. The gossips predict that she will leave the bulk of it to the duke of Connaught and Princess Beatrice, leaving the prince of Wales out in the cold. But she can't prevent the prince from going into the king business, which is said to be a profitable calling.

ONE week after the overthrow of Queen Liliuokalani the Honolulu Liberal propounded this pertinent question: "Ua maopopo ina aole e ae koke o Amerika Huipuia, alaila, he Repubalika ke Aupuni e ku ai a hoea i ka makaukau ana o Amerika e hoohui aku. Eia ka ninau iloko o kela wa, pehea e mau ai ka maluhia?" In the light of subsequent events, it must be confessed that our esteemed Hawaiian contemporary was not far wrong.

LI HUNG CHANG, viceroy of China, was personally very gracious to Messrs. Allen and Sactleben, the American bicyclers who recently crossed Asia on "safeties." He asked them, among other questions, which country they most admired of all through which they had passed. "The United States," they replied. "Why then do you visit other countries?" "Because," they answered, "if we had not seen other countries we should not have known our own was the best."

NAVIGATORS of the sea reach New York with big tales of their experiences during the past few days, but none of them tells a stranger story than does Third Officer James Dakers of the Hurona, a freighter just in at that port from Dundee. He claims that on February 4 a huge wave caught him and carried him clear of the port rail, and then, recurving, brought him back and landed him within ten feet of his original position on the deck. No affidavits go with this "sailor's yarn."

IT is the practice to refer to the exodus to Canada in a cynical manner as if the American defaulter found there a life of ease and happiness. The career of John C. Eno tells a different story. This miserable man belonged to an excellent family, was one of the most popular of men during his course at Yale college, and moved in the best society of New York. He returns home disgraced and heart-broken, but determined to suffer any ignominy rather than remain longer in exile.

WEARIED with the long, cold winter, an exchange puts forth the following pitiful plea: "Backward, turn backward, O, time, in thy flight, give us July again just for to-night: we are disgusted with snow and with ice; hear our rich warble and take our advice; turn back the clock till it reads August one, give us some dog-days, and give us the sun; give us mosquitoes and give us the flies, but turn on some heat before every one dies; bring back our straw hat and good linen pants; give us a chance to live; give us a chance!"

"IF you could stand on the moon," says an astronomer, "the earth would appear to you to be sixty-four times larger than the sun appears to the residents of this mundane sphere; this because the earth has eight times the diameter of the moon, therefore she must necessarily show the moonites sixty-four times as much surface as the moon shows us. The sun, on the other hand, would appear no larger to you from your observatory on the moon than it does from our globe. The earth's atmosphere being blue, the earth must appear as a blue ball to all outside onlookers.

THE jasperized wood of Arizona has become well known by reason of the many cabinet specimens, paper weights and decorative slabs of it that are sent to the eastern cities, but this is by no means the only petrified forest in this country. In the Hoodoo district of the Yellowstone many stumps of trees are found converted to stone, some of them showing knots, grain of the wood and bark as plainly as the living tree, and the pebbly beaches of the Yellowstone river are strewn with tons of fragments of fossil wood. In the Dakota Bad Lands leaf impressions are often found in the hardened clay.

AN exchange tells how Albert Smith, of Milford, Pa., allowed an old apple tree to stand between him and a fortune. A party of oil prospectors, convinced that there was oil on his farm, decided to bore a well in his orchard. Smith objected strenuously, because it would destroy an apple tree for which he had a particular fondness. After vainly endeavoring to persuade Smith, the prospectors removed their apparatus a few feet beyond his tree, on the edge of another man's land, and soon oil was flowing at the rate of 100 barrels an hour. Smith saved his tree and his neighbor got $35,000 in royalties.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Doings of the State Law Makers at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 23.—The senate passed one bill, that being Sanborn's measure to exempt parsonages from taxation. The following were introduced: Making 6 per cent the legal rate of interest and limiting it to 8 by contract; relating to appeals from boards of county commissioners; apportionment of school money; to validate the bonds issued by county commissioners; re-assessment for the construction of ditches, drains and water courses.

Majority and minority reports on the Markham bill for the taxation of railway lands were presented. The consideration of the reports was made the special order for next Wednesday.

In committee of the whole voted to indefinitely postpone Brown's bills to repeal the grain inspection system, and to abolish the railroad and warehouse commission. Canestorp's bill to make the commission elective was considered, but no conclusion was reached.

At 2:15 both houses met in joint session and listened to an address by Hon. J. J. Ingalls of Kansas.

In the house a large number of petitions for "religious liberty," and remonstrances against a new state capitol were read. A remonstrance of the Minneapolis Trades Assembly against the passage of the bill to provide overcoats for the national guard was among those presented.

The following bills were introduced: Relating to adulteration of dairy foods; relating to land surveys and marking meander posts and monuments; making imprisonment for life the punishment for murder in second degree; defining a newspaper for legal publications.

The speaker presented a communication from the governor transmitting correspondence with the world's fair commission, relative to accepting the Minnesota building at Chicago.

The house passed the bill to provide for an assistant bank examiner; also the Wyman university taxation revenue bill and the Boreen bill for the protection of labor and material men. Only one bill on final passage was lost, that of Fletcher, of Hennepin, extending the field of operations of savings banks. In committee of the whole, the good roads bill of Underleak, of Olmstead, was recommended to pass.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 24.—The senate passed the following bills: Against docking horses' tails; providing that corporations organized under special acts may amend their articles the same as corporations organized under the general law; providing that in shipping horses, cattle or mules by rail only enough space need be provided for standing room; requiring county officers to make sworn statement of fees; to bring city officers under the law of garnishment; fixing a legal weight of farm products; authorizing county commissioners to aid county hospitals to the extent of $1,500; passed, all the votes cast being in the affirmative; increasing the penalty of publishing and distributing obscene literature; to make weighmaster's certificates of weight of grain prima facie instead of conclusive evidence; authorizing county commissioners to relieve indigent non-residents temporarily in the county; requiring the attorney general to embody in his report statements of opinions of interest rendered by him; relating to the marriage of blood relatives, declaring all such hereafter contracted incestuous and void (action deferred); to make insurance companies responsible for the face of a policy in case of total loss.

In the house there was a long discussion upon the acceptance of the invitation to visit the world's fair. The senate had accepted, but the house rejected it by a vote of 56 to 58. Bills introduced: To prevent the exhibition of freaks and monstrosities; requiring railway corporations to build, own and operate at all stations where grain is shipped, elevators, track scales, etc., (the railroad and warehouse commission is to decide whether these improvements are necessary at any station); prohibiting adulterated cigarettes; relating to the obstruction of navigable streams; amending chapter 208, general laws of 1887, relating to delivering prisoners at the state reformatory and fixing the sheriff's fees therefor.

The house concurred in the senate resolution fixing the limit of time for the introduction of bills appropriating money from the general improvement fund at March 3.

A long list of senate bills were given their first reading and a number of house files their second reading.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 25.—The senate did a big day's work in one session today and then adjourned to 3 p. m. Monday. The university tax bill was referred to the finance committee, after it had left the university committee with a recommendation to pass. The telephone rate bill was indefinitely postponed, and Davis' bill charging the standard fire insurance policy was lost after an acrimonious discussion. March's bill making an agreement by five-sixths of a jury after six hours' deliberation a legal verdict also went down in defeat.

The following bills were introduced: To amend the law relating to education; to amend the law relating to public schools in the matter of apportioning school moneys; relating to the creation and organization of new counties.

In the house this morning the bill requiring trains to stop at county seats, once lost and reconsidered, was again lost—lacking one vote of enough to pass. The bill to give Duluth an additional judge was passed. Underleak's local option measure, which permits a change in the system of road work, enabling tax payers to pay cash instead of doing work if townships vote in favor of the change, was also passed.

This is the bill proposed by Gov. Nelson, and it was given its second reading and ordered to be placed on general orders.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 27.—There was "no quorum" in the house this morning when the gavel fell. When enough belated members had put in an appearance to warrant the transaction of business the usual list of petitions against free text books and religious legislation were read and referred. The following bills were introduced: Making liquor licenses personal property and allowing them to be mortgaged; to provide for the transfer of moneys collected from insurance companies from the state treasury to municipalities, to be used in support of the fire department; placing building and loan associations under the direct supervision of the public examiner; relating to actions involving the validity of assessments against railroad companies; authorizing county commissioners to appropriate money for building and repair of roads in adjoining counties; to provide for public watering places outside of the incorporated villages and cities; allowing aliens to own real estate in Minnesota; providing for the government of express companies, declaring them common carriers, and bring them under the jurisdiction of the railroad and warehouse commissioners.

In the afternoon the Walsh accident liability bill, removing the $5,000 limit for damages in case of death, came up on special orders. The discussion was varied and earnest. The motion to indefinitely postpone prevailed by a vote of 47 to 37.

The senate met at 3 p. m. with a slim attendance and went through the regular order of business. Senator Glader introduced a bill for the appointment of a commission to locate and plat a new city on the capitol grounds in Kandiyohi county.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES.

Items Regarding the Doings of Legislators at the Capitol.

The committee on judiciary gave a hearing to a delegation from the Woman's Suffrage association, which desires the passage of a bill granting women municipal suffrage, with an educational qualification. Mrs. Julia Nelson of Red Wing was the first speaker, and was followed by Mrs. A. B. Furley of Minneapolis. Senator Donnelly made the third address in favor of the bill, and this closed the hearing.

The senate judiciary committee has agreed to favorably recommend the constitutional amendment proposing to tax sleeping cars, dining cars, telephone and telegraph companies, insurance companies and mining companies. The bill has been amended so that iron output is taxed at 3 cents a ton for five years, and after that time not less than 3 cents nor more than 5 cents. The tax on copper has been fixed at 10 cents. From the gross earnings of the telephone companies is to be subtracted what is annually paid in royalties.

Representative R. C. Dunn introduced a bill defining a newspaper in which the publication of legal notices shall be valid. In addition to the present requirements a newspaper must have an office, must have been published for a year and consist of at least four pages of five columns each. The bill is drawn in accordance with the desires of the State Editorial association.

The Markham bill, providing for the taxation of unused railroad lands, came to its death in the senate judiciary committee, the committee by a vote of 8 to 5 decining in favor of its indefinite postponement. This action on the part of the committee is not altogether a surprise. There has been a question from the start whether this bill did not provide for double taxation, and whether its enactment would not have the effect of repealing the gross earnings tax. The bill was introduced in the house by the member from Aitkin, who truthfully said that its enactment was demanded by the people of his district independent of party lines. Every member from the northern sections of the state, where most of the lands lie, labored earnestly in support of the measure, and numerous delegations of prominent citizens from the interested localities appeared before the house committee to explain why the bill should become a law.

The question of constitutionality and of the repeal of the gross earnings tax was not considered seriously in the house and the bill was finally passed with little or no opposition. It has many friends in the senate judiciary committee, and there is no doubt but that some of the senators who voted in favor of the indefinite postponement would really favor the bill if they did not believe the gross earnings question to be involved. The senate committee considered the matter very carefully, and at some four or five public hearings listened to arguments by some of the best attorneys of the state, representing the friends of the bill and the railroad companies. The committee reached its decision without much trouble. Senator Donnelly wanted the constitution so amended that the gross earnings and the land could be both taxed, and tried to amend the bill to conform to this view, but unsuccessfully.

The house committee on taxes and tax laws have agreed upon a new delinquent tax law, which includes a straight interest system. The bill indorsed was drawn by delegations of citizens who represented the Twin Cities and Duluth, and met in St. Paul to consider the question of delinquent taxes. The bill provides that after June 1, 1893, no penalties shall be charged against delinquent real estate, but that interest at the rate of 9 per cent per annum shall be charged in lieu thereof until said delinquent taxes are paid or redeemed from sale. The county treasurer, whenever called upon, must furnish to taxpayers itemized statements of current or delinquent taxes.

The senate committee on towns and counties has recommended the passage of the following bills: Providing for the organization of unorganized counties as they cast 300 votes; allowing townships to vote $500 for gopher bounties, authorizing town supervisors to issue bonds in certain cases; providing that the terms of office of county auditors after 1894 shall be four years, and county treasurers four years after 1896. An amendment was adopted to the bill last named that no officer shall be eligible for re-election for the next succeeding term.

* * *

The ladies who are making a campaign for their bill giving the fair sex the right of suffrage at municipal elections have won the first round in the contest and it was an important victory for them. By a vote of 7 to 5 the senate judiciary committee has decided to recommend the bill which was introduced by Senator Smith, of Hennepin, for passage. There was a little discussion on the bill before the committee voted. Senator Day said that he did not think that the women wanted to vote, and until they did he did not think the bill should pass.

A Ghost.

The west end of Winona has a sensation in the alleged appearance of a ghost on several occasions recently. Some time ago Frank Lorozin, who had the night watch in the interlocking switch in the west end, became insane, and while insane was killed by a locomotive. A new man was put in Lorozin's place. The first night he was almost terrified upon beholding what he is confident was a spook standing in front of the tower door and effectually barring the poor fellow's exit. He tried it another night, and the same thing occurring, he resigned. Another man took his place. About midnight he was almost paralyzed to see the figure of a man in his chair, which he had but a moment before vacated. The spectre-like figure was slightly stooped, and was absorbed in mentally devouring the contents of a large bible he held in his lap.

A State Department.

A convention of delegates from the various circles of the Ladies of the G. A. R. met in St. Paul to form a state department of the national organization. Mrs. Amanda Wethern of Anoka presided. Organization was effected by the election of the following officers: President, Mrs. J. F. Burr, Minneapolis; senior vice president, Mrs. Clara Robbins, Duluth; junior vice president, Mrs. Kate Faber, Champlin; treasurer, Mrs. Hattie O. Stewart, Anoka; chaplain, Mrs. Emma Howard, Litchfield; counsellor, Mrs. M. A. Anderson, Minneapolis. Mesdames Pribble of Anoka, Miller and Pierce of Minneapolis are the new council of administration, and Mrs. Flora Davy of Duluth was elected delegate.

Fell from the Barn.

Henry Myers, a carpenter, fell from the cupola of a barn, at Lake and Emerson streets, Minneapolis, and was killed. Just how the accident occurred is not known, as the man was working alone. People living in the vicinity saw him on the cupola in the forenoon. His dead body was discovered between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The accident seems to have happened in the forenoon, however, as the contents of the dinner pail were untouched. After his fall he had probably remained unconscious some time, and then, coming to, had crawled six or seven feet away when death overtook him.

Patents.

The following patents have been granted to Minnesotans: Clothes drier, Ruby Z. Curtis, Minneapolis; seeder, Olaf Erickson, Cannon Falls; fence post, Jubal E. Hodson, Redwood Falls; moth proof bag, Charles Ivers, Minneapolis; incandescent gas lamp, Joel G. Jackson, Minneapolis.

Cured When Others Failed

Mr. N. J. McCoun
Kingsley, Iowa.

"In 1879 I had an eruption appear on my left leg and arm. Sometimes it would ulcerate and on account of it I was unable to work a great deal of the time. I had seven doctors examine and treat me without success. Some called it psoriasis, some eczema, some salt rheum and one knowing one called it prairie itch. All the doctors in the county had a trial but none did me a particle of good. I spent all my spare money trying to get relief. Finally I was persuaded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. After using one and a half bottles I saw the benefit. I have now used the third bottle and am completely cured.

SPURGEON WROTE

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.

Yours heartily,
(Rev.) C. H. SPURGEON,

His Fair Patient.

By Robert M. Lockwood.

[Copyright, 1892, by the Author.]

THE gray dawn had begun to filter through the closed blinds at the foot of his bed, and Dr. Banks had just settled himself for a final snooze, when his night-bell rang furiously. The good doctor sprang up and put his head out of the window.

"What is wanted?" he called.

"Is that Dr. Banks?"

The voice was a clear treble, and he could distinguish a female form in the street below.

"Yes," he answered; "what do you want?"

"Oh! doctor," said the voice, tremulously; "please come with me at once. My sister is dying, I fear."

"I'll be right down," called the doctor, and, hurriedly dressing himself, he descended and opened the door.

"Come in," he said; "I will be with you immediately."

As his visitor stepped into the full blaze of the hall light, the doctor saw that she was very beautiful. Her features, although pinched and pale, were clear-cut and classic. Her voice was low and well modulated, and, in spite of her apparent poverty, she had the air of a woman of refinement.

The doctor was soon ready, and together they left the house. She led him by many turns, through narrow streets, until she opened a door into a long, dark passage between two dwellings and passed in. The doctor followed her without hesitation. From the passage they emerged into a court on three sides of which faced a series of dismal and dirty tenements. Into one of these his conductress led him and up some rickety stairs. On the fourth landing she opened a door and entered an apartment. In a moment they stood beside a pallet on which lay a woman. The invalid stirred, and turning her wan face to them asked feebly:

"Have you brought the doctor, Alice?"

"Yes, dearest," and turning to him: "Dr. Banks, this is my sister, Miss Carnold."

The change his name made on the sick woman was electric. From utter listlessness she was aroused to the intenseat excitement. A deep flush overspread her face, and her eyes sparkled like coals as she raised herself upon her elbow and gazed into his face.

"It is not he," she muttered; "yet—yes—there is a likeness!"

She paused, and abruptly addressing the doctor said: "Had you ever a brother, Dr. Banks?"

Her voice was clear and resonant, in marked contrast to her previous mutterings. The doctor answered slowly and deliberately:

"Yes, madam."

"And his name was Henry?"

"Yes."

"Where is he now?"

A dark shade passed over his face.

"I do not know," he said; "I have not heard from him for three years. The last word I had was a letter he wrote me from California, telling of his engagement to a San Francisco girl—a paragon of beauty and goodness."

"That paragon is before you—or, rather, the wreck your faithless brother has left of her."

The doctor caught his breath. "Miss Carnold," he said, "this is a terrible surprise to me! But, come now, your sister shall tell me all. Meanwhile, you must not excite yourself, but must obey my directions strictly, if you wish to get well."

The doctor found that hers was no organic trouble, but rather a general exhaustion of nature's powers, arising from worry and insufficient food. He gave her a quieting potion, and she fell into a gentle slumber. He then asked Miss Alice to give him an account of how the trouble with his brother had happened.

In answer she related that her sister had met Henry Banks at a reception.

"WHY DID YOU DESERT YOUR FIANCEE?"

He was young and handsome, and won her heart. Her father gave his consent to the marriage, and the day was set. Then followed Mr. Carnold's death and the fall from wealth to poverty. He left nothing but his debts. But the climax of their trouble came when Henry Banks disappeared, leaving a letter for his fiancee stating that he had decided to start anew elsewhere and she would never see him again. The two women had worked their way to New York, hoping to meet friends of their father who once lived there, but only to find them dead. They had then rented their present apartments, and eked out a scanty living by taking in sewing. Under the severe strain Mary's health gave way, and she was prostrated. The younger sister, on her way for a physician, had been attracted by Dr. Banks' sign and had sought his aid. When she had finished her recital, the doctor was silent for a time.

"Miss Carnold," he said at last, "these surroundings are to you. Now I have a make which I beg you the same spirit that it is second floor of my house I want you to occupy i sister is well enough to t take her there, and you comfortable."

Alice's only answer w tears. The tender-hear down beside her and toc

"Won't you consider n Miss Carnold," he said, earnestly, "and accept this offer?"

She raised her lovely tear-stained ace and their eyes met.

"Dr. Banks," she exclaimed, "your kindness quite overpowers me. Perhaps I ought to doubt you and spurn your proposal, but I am going to accept, for it seems to me that Providence has sent you to us."

"I trust that I shall prove a true emissary of Providence," he answered

Two weeks passed. The invalid, thanks to her improved circumstances and the doctor's care, was so much improved as to be able to sit up. The doctor spent his evenings with the ladies when not professionally engaged, and charming companions he found them. One evening while they were engaged in an animated conversation the doctor's bell rang, and, excusing himself, he went below. As he opened the door a tall, fine-looking man stepped into the hall. He stood there a moment and then said, in a low voice:

"James!"

"Harry!" exclaimed the other, springing forward and dragging him into the light. "It is you, my dear boy! Where have you been these three years? Come in and get warmed up."

When they were seated before the cheerful grate fire James said:

"Hal, tell me; why did you desert your fiancee in her hour of need?"

"Good heavens, man! who told you that? I did not desert her. My story is a strange one, and but for the most substantial proofs I could never convince you of its veracity. But how did you hear of this?"

"From your fiancee. The Misses Carnold are living upstairs in the utmost poverty."

The other sprang to his feet. "Oh! let me go to her!" he cried. "Do not detain me!"

"No; you must wait," said his brother, quietly. "It would kill her to see you suddenly in her weak state. I will prepare her for the meeting. But first tell me about your disappearance. You wrote to Miss Carnold, saying that you had decided to start anew, and that she would never see you again. That sounds like desertion, doesn't it?"

Hal uttered an exclamation of surprise. "It was a forgery!" he cried, indignantly. "I never wrote such a letter. As I intimated to you, mine is a strange story, and this I suppose is but another chapter.

"Mr. Carnold, Mary's father, the day before he died intrusted to my care a mortgage which he held on a gold mine claim in southern California, and which he had intended to foreclose in three weeks. He wished me to take possession of the claim and run it for his daughters' benefit, as this would be their sole support. I consented, and as soon as I left him placed the precious document in a safe deposit vault.

"Mr. Carnold died the next day, and in the confusion and sorrow I forgot to mention the mortgage to the girls. That evening, sitting in my room, I fell asleep. I woke to find myself securely bound and gagged. To make a long story short, I was carried to a cab, conveyed a long way from the city to a lonely spot, and there kept prisoner, being guarded day and night by two of my four armed attendants.

"After two years of this sort of life, I succeeded in making my escape while my guards were in a drunken stupor after a day of debauch. I reached San Francisco in safety, foreclosed the mortgage, and caused the arrest of all concerned in my detention. Their cases come up in the November term. The mine was now the property of the girls, but no trace of them could I find; they had disappeared. I then came on and sought you. Like a fairy-story, isn't it?"

"It certainly is, my dear Hal," answered James, when his brother had finished the recital of his adventures. "I will run up now and break the good news to Mary and Alice."

"A tiresome patient," he said, as he entered the room. "But I have learned through him that my brother Henry is well, and, what will be good news to you, that he has been totally blameless in the matter of his supposed desertion."

He then related his brother's story, being careful to conceal the fact that the mortgage interested them.

"And so your brother is a rich miner now?" said Mary. "I hope, Dr. Banks, you will do all in your power to keep us apart."

"I will do nothing of the sort, Miss Carnold. He is anxious to see you, I understand."

"But do you not see that we are miserably poor and he is a wealthy man?" she said, sadly.

"Suppose I tell you," he answered, "that you are both rich? Suppose I tell you that the mortgage was left by your father in my brother's care for your maintenance, and that the gold mine is yours?"

The two women sprang up with exclamations of surprise; but the imperturbable doctor said to Mary, as he gently forced her back into her seat:

"Come, now, Miss Carnold, I see that I must exercise my authority. You must not excite yourself: you are still very weak. Besides—well, there's another patient," he added, interrupting himself, as the bell rang vigorously. As he left the room he said, mysteriously:

"If the patient proves to be a friend of yours, I will bring him up."

In a short time there were footsteps on the stairs—a knock—a cry—and the long-separated lovers were clasped in each other's arms.

"What a joyous reunion!" said Dr. Banks, as he and Alice Carnold sat apart watching the happy pair. "But do you realize that it means a separation to us, unless—unless you wish to avoid it?"

The beautiful head drooped to hide her blushes, but she did not answer.

"Alice, darling," he continued, passionately, "when first I saw those lovely, imploring eyes of yours, I loved you. Now, you are a rich woman, and I only a poor doctor—"

"Hush! dear," she said, interrupting him; "I am rich, indeed, with such a love as yours. Take me, unworthy as I am; for you are my life."

—"Can you tell me, my friend," said the elderly gentleman to the keeper of the camel, "what the hump on the camel's back is for?" "What's it for?" "Yes; of what value is it?" "Well, it's lots of value. The camel wouldn't be no good without it." "Why not?" "Why not? Yer don't suppose people would pay a quarter to see a camel without any hump on him, do yer?"—Boston Globe.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Onion Soup: Put a beef bone in cold water, let it simmer two hours. Slice three large onions very thin and fry a delicate brown. Remove the soup bone, put the onions in the pot; thicken with browned flour. Let it boil up, season to taste and serve in a hot tureen with cubes of toasted bread. —Chicago Ledger.

—Granola Grape Mush: Heat a quart of the juice from canned grapes (the pure juice may be diluted in one-third water) to boiling, and sprinkle into it about one pint of granola. Cook for two or three minutes and serve hot. Grape juice, pure or diluted, may be used instead of water to cook Graham flour, making another grape mush.—Health.

—Apple Fritters: We are very fond of apple fritters, and they are not troublesome to make. Beat three eggs and stir with them one-half cupful of sugar, a teaspoonful of salt, one pint of milk, two cupfuls of chopped apples and a little grated nutmeg. Fry these in hot lard as you would doughnuts, and immediately on taking them up sprinkle powdered sugar over them. These are nice with or without a sauce. Lemon sauce is nice, as is almost any fruit sauce.—Prairie Farmer.

—An idea prevails that winter weather is beneficial to young children, says the N. Y. Tribune. If the temperature be below freezing point the more dangerous it is for the child's health the colder and drier the air gets, no matter whether the skin is kept warm or not; the cold dry air irritates the respiratory organs and is apt to cause inflammation. This is the more dangerous the younger the child is. Cold, damp weather, with or without rain, when the temperature is above freezing point, is much less to be feared if the child be sufficiently well wrapped.

—Delicious Pan-Corn Bread: Put one pint of corn meal in a pan. Into this put a big pinch of salt and of sugar; place a cooking-spoonful of lard or butter into the pan, and pour over all enough boiling (not merely hot) water to scald the meal. Stir thoroughly, and set away to cool for a little while. When cool enough, to be made cold by the addition of sufficient milk to form into a batter about the consistency of thick cream. Beat up six eggs separately; add the yolks, then the whites, and, lastly, two full teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Stir thoroughly.—Health and Humanity.

FANTASTIC BUT FASHIONABLE.

Some of the Sleeves That Will Help Make an Old Gown New.

"If you want to make over your old evening gowns, put in new sleeves and a Watteau train," is the advice of a well-known dressmaker.

The sleeves for evening dresses are fanciful in the extreme—the more fantastic the more fashionable. One of the queerest conceits in this line is that of a girl, whose elbow does improve on acquaitance, but whose arm near the shoulder is a thing of beauty. So in putting new sleeves in one of her party dresses she made a frill of silk and ostrich tips over the shoulder, and a full puff of the material reaching below the elbow. Then at the top of the sleeve she made a big oval slash, through which the pretty pink flesh gleams in a fascinating manner. The sleeve that one girl has put in a cleverly reconstructed black lace gown was a full puff of the lace, finished at the elbow by a band of fancy gold ribbon, which then passes up over the sleeve and forms the shoulder knot.

Another girl who had more ideas than material dispensed with the sleeve altogether. The pert little bow on her shoulder had more than its share of ends, which reached almost to the elbow, and were there tacked to the long gloves which the damsel sacrificed to this particular gown.

Finally there is the maiden who had both ideas and material. She made a big square sleeve, draped at the shoulder, and falling in loose folds nearly to the wrist, where it is finished with an edge of fur, surmounted by heavy gold embroidery.—Chicago Times.

Vinegar and Digestion.

Modern laboratory investigations are bringing into question the propriety of using as food numerous articles which have almost universally been accepted as harmless or useful articles of food. Dr. Roberts showed long ago that tea and coffee hindered digestion. Condiments have been interdicted in consequence of the irritating effects upon the stomach and kidneys. The microscopists have discovered that the eels of vinegar sometimes take up their abode in the alimentary canal as parasites, and become a source of irritation and disturbance to the digestive organs; and now, according to Virchow's archives, John has been investigating the influence of acids upon the salivary digestion, or the conversion of starch into sugar, and the fact has appeared that acetic acid connected with tartaric and oxalic acids, very materially hinders this portion of the digestive process. It is worthy of note, as being in the life of scientific progress, that many of the most skillful chefs are substituting in their culinary processes lemon juice for vinegar, thus avoiding at once both the wriggling eels and the mischief-making acid.—Dr. J. H. Kellogg.

Silk Petticoats.

The extreme elegance and elaboration of the silk petticoat of the woman of fashion make them one of the most costly of the adjuncts of her dress. Not only must the petticoat be of rich brocade or some elaborate silken goods, but the corset is often made to match it, of the same rich materials. In order to insure a perfect fit of the gown the skirt is fastened to the edge of the corset, and thus all superfluous fullness caused by fastening the petticoat around the waist is done away with. A fashionable woman, who buys most of her gowns in Europe, brought over a set of corset and petticoat to match or harmonize in color with each of the many gowns she ordered. The gowns were worn next to the corset in every case, without any cover between. It is not an uncommon thing for a fashionable woman to possess dozens of these elaborate silk skirts.—N. Y. Tribune.

Care of the Body.

Just a little more care in the matter of food and how it is prepared and eaten, and of the methods for protecting the body from colds and drafts, and your days of health will be increased and you will feel yourself blessed. We owe it to others more than to ourselves, to do all that can be done to preserve health and thus to lighten the loads of those upon whom we have to lean when sick, and at the same time to add to our own enjoyment of life and its myriads of attractions.—Humanity and Health.

WOMEN'S FADS.

One of Them Is a Mania for Hiding Things from Burglars.

Every woman is possessed of some mania in a mild form, which, however, is of as pronounced a type, though less aggressive, as that which has sent many a poor mortal to the insane asylum. The New York Commercial Advertiser claims that this is no rash statement, but merely a study from actual life. Take in your own family, for instance: Do you not say: "Jessie or Belle or Susie is absolutely crazy on such and such a subject?" And though the topics vary with the women the dementia is not lessened one whit thereby. Look at the number of feminine care-takers who have a passion for hiding away their possessions, and so carefully do they put them out of sight that they themselves forget where the place is when it comes time to find them. Those people would indignantly resent any insinuation as to their sanity, but does it seem possible that well-balanced minds will stow away a gold thimble or a roll of bills in a pair of rolled-up stockings, or put jewelry or cash in the scrap basket or the grate, and then, in less than twenty-four hours, give the stockings away to a blind beggar, sell the contents of the basket to the ragman and light a cozy fire in the grate right on top of the most cherished possessions? Yet this is done every day, if the papers speak the truth; and who would have the boldness to doubt the statements of the press? Then again there are women so morbidly afraid of robbers that it becomes a mania with them, and every night a search begins under beds and into dark closets, which, if successful in its object, would turn their hair gray in one night. When bedtime comes they load themselves down with the family silver, which they carry up to their sleeping apartments; every window is not only bolted, but tin pans are set at such angles that a burglar's breath would knock them over and thus throw the timid creatures upstairs into violent hysterics, instead of putting them on guard against the intruders, as is the intention of the wobbly kitchen utensil. Some women have a mania for bargains and own yards and yards of remnants in lengths and colors that are simply useless, yet which, because of their craze, they could not possibly resist buying. These are but a few instances, but hundreds of others could be cited, and certain it is that though the writer and the reader of these lines think themselves quite sane on every point there is some flaw in their mental armor that their friends could probably dilate upon for hours.

THERE is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. We offer you a ready made medicine for Coughs, Bronchitis, and other diseases of the Throat and Lungs. Like other so called Patent Medicines, it is well advertised, and having merit it has attained a wide sale under the name of Piso's Cure for Consumption.

It is now a "Nostrum," though at first it was compounded after a prescription by a regular physician, with no idea that it would ever go on the market as a proprietary medicine. But after compounding that prescription over a thousand times in one year, we named it "Piso's Cure for Consumption," and began advertising it in a small way. A medicine known all over the world is the result.

Why is it not just as good as though costing fifty cents to a dollar for a prescription and an equal sum to have it put up at a drug store?

YOU ARE RUPTURED We Can Cure You NO CURE, NO PAY. When cured it costs you $3.00 or you can wear a few hours and it will cost you nothing. Send 6c stamp. HAYDEN CO., B. 19, North Windham, Maine.

DELANO DIARY

—Fresh Oysters at C. H. Green & Co's Grocery.

—Call at Miss White's for a fascinator left at the hall on the 22nd.

—Call at this office for a story book, found near Jacob Henn's place.

—Simon Weldelee expects to build his new residence early in the Spring.

—Monday evening's train stopped in Delano for breakfast, Tuesday morning.

—John B. Plattner was the purchaser of Hitz's fine bay mare, on Thursday morning.

—Jim Nelson and David McLeod have been engaged on the G. N. Ry. bridge, at this place several days, this week.

—It has been learned here that Sam Pape is "up to his eyes" in business at Breckenridge. Wonder if he is shoveling snow?

—Messrs. Borke and McKee arrived on time with the mail, Tuesday morning the first over the road most of the way from Watertown.

—Andrew Rieder started for Rockford, on Tuesday, but his sand failed him when he arrived at Sherry's and he turned back home. Time about 2 hours.

—An eight horse-team from the Ziebarth neighborhood, hitched to a snowplow appeared in town on the 28th after the storm. The consequence was a good road in that direction.

—We understand the stage drivers to Watertown threaten to institute proceedings against the road overseers having oversight of the road between Watertown and this place unless traveling is soon made better.

—While uncovering the sidewalk in front of the GAZETTE office, on Tuesday morning "Our Jim." discovered a fine, large apron, neat, and clean and thinks "It's a poor wind that blows nobody good." The owner can have the article by calling for it and proving ownership.

—It may not be generally known but Mayor Coolen claims to know something about spelling. He says "b—r—tswi o—m" spells "broom." Perhaps he has absorbed some knowledge of this branch while watching Buckley write those hefty editorials while Gutzwiller sat behind him with the dictionary.

—Richard Dunn returned from Minneapolis on the Monday evening train, which remained, with passengers on board, near the big elevator in the city all night, arriving here Tuesday about 10 a. m. He says the passenger train bound east on Monday evening ran into a freight train near there and knocked several cars off the track.

—Liveryman Dell Young being considerably interested in school matters, especially the Intermediate department, kindly hitched to the bobsleds, on Tuesday morning and conveyed the teacher to the school house. Just not to appear partial at all, he invited the Principal and the Primary teachers to accompany him, and they did with many thanks.

—Julius Hardt and wife and Mrs. Haskel, of Maple Plain came up, on Tuesday to the Odd Fellows Anniversary. Julius tells quite an interesting story about the wreck, he being one of the passengers on the train. No one badly hurt. The caboose on the freight train took fire. The butter and eggs on the baggage car on the passenger train were considerably mixed up and passengers shook up some.

—The Cosmopolitan for March is on our table. It is up to the high standard established by its predecesors. And is today one of the leading magazines of our country. The articles "Berlin," "The Abysmal Depths of the Sea," "In our Cotton Belt," "The Great Trans-Siberian Railway," "The Great Congresses at the World's Fair" and others are timely and instructive. The Cosmopolitan, monthly magazine and the GAZETTE can be had for one year for $3.40. Now is a good time to subscribe.

—One thing in Delano needs roasting. It is the sidewalk from Dedrick's corner to the new tailor shop on River street. I. Gutzwiller, Jr., was seen laboriously passing over the place mentioned. Hi Dyer acted much as if dancing a jig. John Lohmiller walked like some old Sault, and others frequently sit down and rest, before completing the trip over this "slick" piece of sidewalk. About the roasting there is a wonderful concensus of opinion. Occasionally some more than usually excited individual wishes, out loud, that that particular piece of side-walk, the occupant of the property, the wealthy owner, the street commissioner, and the enterprising council that so listlessly awaits the coming of mid-summer's sultry sun to remove the ice and snow, were consigned, in one lump to some place where they would be roasted. Something must be done to stop this swearing.

—Spelling School to-night, at Rockford. Between Delano and Rockford schools.

—Will Guptil has rented rooms over the City Grocery. His mother and himself are to keep house there.

—The New York World and the GAZETTE each week for one year for $1.80. Subscribe and keep posted on what the world is doing.

—Frank Puditzke has concluded to go west, and the new tailor shop here will be closed. Ole Erwig is still in the business same as ever.

—Our Village Democratic committee ought to have snap enough to call a meeting on Saturday evening in honor of the inauguration of President Cleveland.

—Several of our star-gazing citizens were busily engaged on Sunday evening observing a phenomina in the zenith, a beautiful cross spanning the heavens.

—A jolly trio, on their way home to the county-seat took an early supper at Young's Hotel, on Monday. There was Rev. Davis and the other Davis and Sheriff Carpenter. It was hard telling who had charge, the sheriff or the preacher.

—The Eagle wants a dam in the river. This would make a splendid "sinking fund." It could furnish a place for "taxes" every year besides raising the water a few feet would help keep the River-street cellars moist the balance of the year.

—Miss Joy Kerr, of Minneapolis, is authority for the ability of ex-Mayor Schaffer and Esq. Billings to turn double summersaults, backwards, from the hind seat of the Rockford stage. She thinks, with practise, they might acquire the knack of alighting more gracefully.

—As the snow-plow thundered and snorted through town at 5:23, A. M., on Tuesday, from the west it piled the beautiful up in the corner by the bay window at the depot several feet high breaking in one of the large panes of glass and covering the telegraph instruments to the depth of about a foot. Menster Upgren says it took about an hour to get them in working order.

—One of the worst snow storms of the season struck us on Monday, snowing and blowing was the programme all day and night. On Tuesday morning, bright, and early most of the business men in town were bowing and scraping at a terrible rate, along the sidewalks, and all seemed on a common plain, and intent, for once, on the same object, that of cleaning the snow from the sidewalks. Nothing like dame nature and piles of beautiful snow to place people on an equality.

—The Eagle choir brought down the house at the I. O. O. F's. Anniversary, on Tuesday, by singing. Editor Buckley, whose wife is quite tall, sang "I want a short wife." Journeyman Everson whose spouse towers away above him, sang "I want a tall wife" while Gott with his deep base, sang "I want no wife at all," although every body knows he would not trade the one he has for a cow, nor for any other consideration. The singing was hard to beat not to mention the sentiment.

—Mrs. Jarley's "Wax Figgers" at City Hall last night, by the Presbyterian society of Rockford was poorly attended. The programme was carried out and those present had many a good laugh. Some of the school children thought Mrs. J. did not stick strictly to historical facts at all times. Yet her "blunders" served to refreshen their memories all the same. "The Goblins will get you," "The old man's dream," "The Irishman," "Columbus," "The only private," "The Bachelor and his wife" and many other numbers were enjoyed by all.

—John Rowan, well-known among many people here as "the best editor the Eagle ever had" and who was tried for taking money not belonging to him in this place a few years ago, and so zealously defended by the present editor in-chief; who later was arrested at Litchfield for forgery and sentenced to Stillwater, has again come to grief. Having just returned from the pineries to the Sawdust city he is reported in the Journal, as having forged several small checks and again been arrested and bound over, in the sum of $800. to await the action of the grand jury.

—We are told that neighbor Buckley picked up an interesting "item of news" concerning a "large bank" in St. Paul, on Monday evening from a brother "Hinglishman" coming in from the west, very much to the amusement of a large crowd of passengers and by-standers. You should never bother the Queen's own Mr. Buckley when you are out "interviewing." It was given us something like this:

Dry joker: Did you hear about that large bank in St. Paul, Mr. Buckley?

Mr. Buckley: (eagerly) No, what bank?

Dry joker: Why, snow bank.

(Exit Mr. Buckley amid renewed applause.)

—A genuine old settler's meeting was held in the open air, in Delano, on Saturday, Feb. 25, on the corner opposite the band stand and the town pump. So near that much of the speaking could be heard in the GAZETTE office. Mr. Hoisington, of Independence, and Mr. Powers, of Delano, were the orators of the occasion. The first gentlman said that "when a boy he did as George Washington did, went to chopping down his father's orchard." The second speaker said "me too." The meeting was exceedingly interesting and everybody seemed tickled as could be. Talk about rigid Minnesota weather when men who have already lived out the allotted time on this terrestial sphere can stand and enjoy a friendly conversation for an hour in the dead of winter on the street corner.

—In days gone by our town has been run on the "terror" plan. Our caucuses have been manipulated, people, citizens of the United States have been bulldozed and terrorized into remaining away from the primary meetings; from expressing themselves when there. Through fear of reading in cold print that they were "hoodlums" and belonged to the "bummer element." that they were "poor" and did not have a "bank account" and that they ought not to vote to "pay out money" when they did not pay "taxes," some have stayed away from caucus. Our citizens have been made to believe that a "non-partisan" council or school board should be elected and they have allowed this system to go on until it has reached that stage where to mention the condition of the "South", to tell of the "shot gun" or the "Kuklux" the most effectively, you have only to cite our citizens to home scenes. You have only to point out the state of affairs here. In many places in the South, "negroes," we are told, are in the majority, but are deprived of their votes, through fraud and terrorizing. Can it be worse than it has been in Delano? Democrats are in the majority here. Yet they have not a single representative on the school board. Nor on the Teachers' Examining board. Are there no democrats in town as capable as the Republicans who now occupy these places, on the so termed, "non-partizan" boards? The village council for years was almost as bad. The majority often being of the minority party. And run on that plan until three years ago when we got what every citizen knows was the straightest council we have ever had, and kept it two years. At the last election the manipulators of non-partizan" politics succeeded in getting a man on the council by five votes, which "knocked out" the straight ticket, and ever since, the organ up street has been howling about a "straight democratic" council, while we have been having a council which was not the one put up by the Democratic caucus. Don't be afraid to come out to the caucuses. Don't be afraid to nominate a ticket of which no one need be ashamed. If the Republicans are to play the hog, as they have done, when they cou'd, put up a good Democratic ticket, and let them put up their best men on a straight Republican ticket and then if any man not fit for the position appears on either ticket we will at least have a choice between two. But for a "non-partizan" caucus to be run by a few "tax-payers" "money loaners" who wish to "negotiate" bonds and "refund" debts, and make a few dimes out of the people even "if they have to use "yellow" and white tickets at the ballot box, and do other things "law or no law" the people have seen enough of this sort It is time the voters come out to the polls, and, fearless of the terms "Hoodlums" and other things that have been hurled at the majority when it did not suit the taste of some, elect a good council. Be at the caucuses and help pick them out.

County Cullings.

Under the new plan of redistricting the state, Wright county is to be a legislatiye district by itself, with one Senator and two representatives.

Our legislature is not passing many bills this winter. The anti-special legislation law recently adopted by a vote of the people is having the desired effect.

We are pleased to know that the Annandale Post knows a good thing when it sees it, but sorry to have them give credit to the Delano Eagle for what they found in our columns. We mean "Our Nation's Dead."

There is one Post master in this county whose position will doubtless be filled by some one who will be more of a gentleman than to write on a newspaper belonging to a subscriber, and return it to the publisher a request to "Stop this paper or send it to ——." Does the postmaster mean for us to understand that our subscriber has taken up his residence in that country that burns with fire and brimstone, and that he will be there in future to deliver the paper to him?

Brother Eaton, in his paper, made rather a suggestive mistake a few weeks back, while advising his readers that the office of Superintendent of schools could well be dispensed with in our county, and that the money might be turned into building roads, an "e" got into the place where an "o" should have been, and intead of reading "schools," as was meant, the article read that it would be well to abolish the office of Superintendent of "scheels" and suggested using the money to employ an engineer of roads. Had the "Eagle eye" chanced to have alighted on this typographical error she would, doubtless, at once have heralded abroad that the pretentious Senator was guilty of "downright ignorance," or have written a panegyric on why the Superintendent of Hades should hold on to his job.

Among Our Exchanges.

David A. Melrose has sold his farm in Silver Creek, to Nils Anderson, of Minneapolis, for $3,000. Mr. Anderson will occupy the place about the first of April. Mr. Melrose expects to go to Alaska, on a mining trip to be gone all summer.—Wright County Times.

Col. R. C. Stevens, editor of the Morris Tribune, died last Friday, week Feb. 17th, after a long illness, aged 60 years. Mr. Stevens was an able and consientious man, a veteran of the late war and a printer from boyhood. He attended the Brightwood editorial outing in 1891.—Litchfield Independent.

An exchange tells of a school teacher who has introduced a novel system of spelling in her school. When one of the girls misses a word, the boy spelling it correctly is permitted to kiss the girl. The boys are improving, but, it is feared, the girls will soon forget how to spell their own name.—Starbuck Journal.

Anoka Union: I wish I could make the rising generation of boys believe it isn't a little bit smart to smoke. About every youngster I meet who is smoking, wears a look and his actions seem to say. "What a great boy am I." Boys, you may think so, but if you knew how a majority of people view it, you would never be seen smoking in public, that is if you care about what people say. If you don't, all right. A boy who don't care, seldom amounts to much, and no one cares for him.—Litchfield Independent.

TEACHERS' EXAMINATION.

SPRING SERIES, 1893.

Public examination of teachers for Wright county will be held as follows:

At HOWARD LAKE,	March 7th and 8th
At DELANO,	March 7th and 8th.
At BUFFALO,	March 7th and 8th.
At MONTICELLO,	March 10th and 11th.
At ANNANDALE,	March 14th and 15th.

It will be observed that examinations occur at three different points on the same days. Each examination will occupy two whole days opening at 8:30 a. m. No teacher will be allowed to enter the examination after 11 o'clock a. m. of the first day, and then only on rendering a good excuse for being late, and all teachers are expected to be present at the opening of the examination. These examinations will be conducted pursuant to the state rules and regulations and teachers will need the full allotted time to do themselves justice.

At two points I shall have my examinations conducted by deputies; this step is unavoidable as the dates for examinations are fixed by the state superintendent. If, on trial, this plan proves unacceptable to the people of Wright county, we will go back to the old method.

S. H. LINDSLEY,
County Superintendent.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms,

THE WHITE CHURCH.

BY C. E. M.

One-half mile or more from the station.
In the very small village of B,
There stands a modest wood structure--
'Tis the little home church that you see.

It is not like the beautiful temples,
Nor the grand old cathedrals of Rome,
Yet its portals will ever be hallowed--
This liittle white church near our home.

Its windows reflect no adornment,
No portraits of saints on the wall;
Yet oft has its silence re-echoed
To a message from the Ruler of all.

There's a slender white spire pointing upward
To the mansions of immortal life.
While a silvery-tongued bell ever warns us
To beware of earth's follies and strife.

Calling men to forsake all their sins,
And for unfading joys to prepare,
That a life like the Christ-life, best fits them
The glories of heaven to share.

And oft at the even-tide hour.
At the close of a long busy day,
Have we met in its dear sacred precincts
To shut out the world, and to pray.

To Him, who takes note of us all,
The humble, the lowly, the great;
Alike would he bid us all enter
The beautiful pearly-white gate.

Fond memories will cling to this building,
While life its long shadows shall cast
Of the friends, who once labored among us.
Into busier scenes have they passed.

Oh, then, tell us naught of the churches,
With archways and high-vaulted dome;
They cannot compare for one moment
With the little white church near our home!

THE inauguration of President Cleveland at Washington, was conducted, on Saturday last. A vast concourse of people witnessed the ceremonies, notwithstanding the stormy weather of the morning hours. The oath of office was administered by Chief Justice Fuller. President Cleveland placing his hand on the bible given him by his mother, the same one used at his other inauguration to the first office in the gift of the American people. He at once occupied the White House, accompanied by his family.

In his address he reiterated the pledges on which he was elected and asks for the harmonious assistance of all in the discharge his duty. The question of finance he claims is of great importance and needs immediate attention. Pensions should be judiciously administered. Trusts and combines should be looked after. Tariff reform should be carried out in accordance with the ideas of those who done the voting. In closing his address he says: "Above all, I know there is a Supreme Being who rules the affairs of men, and whose goodness and mercy have always followed the American people; and I know He will not turn from us now, if we humbly and reverently seek His powerful aid."

IT looks strange to see what pains some of our Republican papers take to run down the incoming administration. They assult the character of Judge Gresham for whom our state was almost solid for the Presidential candidacy a few years since. Now that he has come out from among them and said he could not look upon their actions concerning protection with any degree of approval and would, as did several other judges in different parts of the country support Cleveland for the Presidency, repudiating the McKinley bill as did James G. Blaine, they find fault. And he that was their choice as a Republican for President is now found fault with for accepting the position of Secretary of State under Grover Cleveland. Politics appears to make a difference with Republicans as well as with Democrats.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 3, 1893,

President Cleveland, Mrs. Cleveland and baby, Ruth, arrived yesterday, and notwithstanding the attempt to prevent a popular demonstration, by not making public the schedule of their train, they were met at the station and escorted to the hotel at which temporary quarters had been previously engaged for them by an immense crowd of enthusiastic admirers. They will take possession of the White House immediately after the inaugural parade, as the personal belongings of Mr. Harrison and his family have already been removed therefrom, and Mr. Harrison will take his permanent departure in company with Mr. Cleveland whom he will accompany to the capitol tomorrow. When Mr. Cleveland has been sworn in and has delivered his inaugural address he will proceed to the President's stand in front of the White House, from which he will review the mammoth parade. Having no desire to see the parade and hear the trumphant cheers of the democrats, Mr. Harrison will leave at once for Indianapolis, on a special train which will be in waiting for him

All of the members of the cabinet, except Judge Gresham, are on hand ready for business. He may get here tomorrow, but the probabilities are that he will not arrive until next week.

"Hurrah for Cleveland and Stevenson!" greets one on every hand, as the democratic organizations from every section march through the beautifully decorated streets, to their respective quarters. The advance guard of these organizations was headed by Vice President Stevenson and his personal escort, the Illinois club, of Bloomington. Wednesday night Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson were the guests of honor at the largest reception of the year, given by Mr. and Mrs. Levi P. Mortion. Mr. Steyenson was extremely popular when he was First Assistant Postmaster General under Mr. Cleveland's first administration, but the ovation given him at this reception, and since, at his hotel proves that his promotion, although to an office that controls no patronage has made him still more popular.

Some ideas of the length of the inaugural parade may be formed from the fact that the official order of the procession, which contains only the names of the commanders of divisions, marshals, and the names of the organizations participating, takes up four long newspaper columns, set in solid nonpariel.

Tammany Hall is in town, 3,000 strong, and although its tiger is not at large its cheers are heard on all sides. Its numbers, to say nothing of its great work in the last campaign, fairly entitle it to the honor it has gained of being the banner civic organization in the greatest inaugural procession ever seen.

The anti-option bill after a long and somewhat tedious illness died in the House Wednesday afternoon from an attack of that disease which has been so fatal to members of the bill family—lack of votes. The vote was taken upon a motion to concur in the Senate amendments to the bill, and resulted in 172 for, to 123 against. The motion was made under a suspension of the rules and two-thirds were required for its adoption.

The democratic Senators have been doing great work for the party and for the country this week. It is to them alone that the credit for holding up the treaty for the annexation of Hawaii belongs, thus leaving to the new administration, as Mr. Harrison should have done, the duty of making a proper investigation and deciding what shall be done about Hawaii. For this these Senators are entitled to the thanks of the country. A treaty of annexation is far too important a matter to be railroaded through the Senate. And they are entitled to the thanks of the democratic party for having presented the confirmation of the nomination of Judge Hancheit, of Michigan, to the vacancy made in the U. S. Circuit court by the promotion of Judge Jackson to the Supreme Court. They were determined that a republican should not be put in charge of this district in place of a democrat, just on the eve of a democratic administration.

Prominent republican Senators are charged with having deliberately gone back on their pledged words, concerning the bill, passed by the House this week, repealing that clause of the McKinley tariff law which imposes a duty of 4 cents a pound on block tin. It is said that Representative Springer and other democrats of the House Ways and Means committee were assured by leading republican Senators that if they would put the bill through the House it should be passed by the Senate and when the bill was passed the Senate committee on Finance, by a party vote, refused to even report it to the Senate. Well, there is at least the satisfaction of knowing that things will hereafter be more according to democratic ideas.

Very Pretty Indeed.

(Essay for Mrs. Beede's School at Rockford.)

It was a beautiful day in Autumn. It was on one of those warm sunny morning just as we all like, I entered the school room and I was greeted by a very pretty vase of flowers, I do not know who put it on the teacher's desk, but I could not keep my eyes off of it and I expect that is the reason why I did not have my history lesson that day. Oh! It was so pretty, so nicely arranged so many beautiful flowers, there was the sweet mignonette, the red, the purple, and pink verbena, I do think that is so pretty, "pinks." Oh! those lovely things double, yes more than double red and purple, pink and white, and dark red. There was the double white and purple. I could pick and study flowers, "till the cows come home" is the old saying.

What is it in flowers that makes you love them so asked a lady of me once. I could not tell her there but could I tell her now. Yes, I think I could, I think I could tell her just why, I love them.

I think flowers are the most beautiful gift of heaven.

Jeffersonian Ideas.

Below we give some of Thomas Jefferson's ideas of Democracy.

FIRST. Equal and exact justice to all men of whatever State or persuasion, religious or political.

SECOND. Peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations; entangling alliance with none.

THIRD. The support of the State governments in all their rights as the most competent administrators of our domestic concerns and the surest bulwarks against anti-republican tendencies.

FOURTH. The preservation of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad.

FIFTH. A jealous care of the right of election by the people, a mild and safe corrective of abuses, which are lopped by the sword of revolution where peaceable means are unprovided.

SIXTH. Absolute acquiescence in the decision of the majority, the vital principles of republics, from which is no appeal but to force, the vital principle and immediate parent of despotism.

SEVENTH. A well-disciplined militia, our best reliance in peace, and for the first moments of war, till regulars may relieve them.

EIGHTH. The supremacy of the civil over the military authority.

NINTH. Economy in the public expenses, that labor may be lightly burdened.

TENTH. The honest payment of our debts and the sacred preservation of the public faith.

ELEVENTH. Encouragement of agriculture and of commerce as its handmaid.

TWELFTH. The diffusion of information and arraignment of all abuses at the bar of public reason.

THIRTEENTH. Freedom of religion.

FOURTEENTH. Freedom of the press.

FIFTEENTH. Freedom of the person under the protection of the habeas corpus.

SIXTEENTH. Trial by juries impartially selected.

"These principles," said Jefferson, "form the bright constellation which has gone before us and guided our steps through the age of revolution and reformation. The wisdom of our sages and the blood of our heroes have been devoted to their attainment. They should be the creed of our political faith, the text of civic instruction, the touchstone by which to try the services of those we trust; and should we wander from them in moments of error or alarm, let us hasten to retrace our steps and to regain the road which alone leads to peace, liberty and safety.

It is because Democrats believe every one of these fundamental principles to be true that they are Democrats.

That Predicted Roman Catholic Uprising.

Some of our good friends have expressed their regret that we should disapprove as we did some time ago, any organized effort to oppose Roman Catholics, as such, at the ballot box. But we confess to not having the slightest fear of that long promised Roman Catholic uprising that is to sieze the reins of government in protestant countries. The ancestors of the editor of this paper from away back were Irish Protestants, of a race imbued with the most intense prejudice against Roman Catholicism. And they had good reason for such feeling. In earliest childhood our blood was stirred times without number by recitals of the persecutions and tortures of Protestants by bigoted Roman Catholics and envenomed and tyrannical priests. And they were no fairy tales, either. This writer's father for many years belonged to an anti-Catholic society. But later in life he withdrew from that society, having concluded that such organizations had no special function in defending or maintaining Protestantism, and becoming convicted, also, that the long-threatened Roman Catholic uprising was a more improbable event than ever. In our judgment we need no anti-Catholic organizations. Yet we feel sure we shall not be able to persuade some of our readers but what there is great danger that some Roman Catholic pope will possess and rule this country in the no distant future. We would distinguish between the work of exposing the errors of Roman Catholicism and the policy of fighting the Catholics as a people. The first is our right and privilege, without offense to any American citizen; the second is founded on a groundless apprehension, and an irrational theory of dislodging foreign elements from the American body politic. The Roman Catholic system contains a mixture of truth and error; we can best fight its errors if we freely concede the truth it represents and accords its votaries full rights as citizens. Truth, and not force, should be our weapon.

There is a growing element in the Roman Catholic church that is disposed to give its support to all moral reforms and stand by our cherished institutions. Protestants were not united on the question of allowing the World's Fair to be opened to the public on the Sabbath. But many Catholic papers and a considerable portion of the Catholic clergy stood with us for Sunday closing.

We have said nothing that cannot be reconciled with the necessity of being watchful of Jesuitical and hierarchial manipulations of political and governmental affairs. In this, however, Protestants are not divided, having a majority of six to one, at leat, and ought not to be worsted in the end.—Methodist Herald.

Hash.

EDITOR GAZETTE:—"Hash" seems to be the principal diet that Old Gutzy thinks good enough for the readers of his sheet. How often has he not told them about the missing records, how often not glorified in the verdict of those 12 men good and true. And right here let me remark was there not a few years ago also 12 good and true men in New Orleans who aquitted the cut throats of Italians, were there not next day a mob of prominent citizens who shot the Italians down like dogs, and was there not a grand jury down there afterwards who said we don't find anything to indict? Yes, great are our American juries Glorious Institution.

But not enough with his own and his pups slobberings he writes a set of queries and signs them "Inquirer," it gives greater effect you know; it gives the impression as if some one else was interested in the stink pots contents. He even promises more queries, and I would suggest the following and have them signed next time "Schmutzmiller" viz: Where is Tascott? What became of Charlie Ross? Who struck Billy Patterson? Did Gutzwiller use yellow tickets for and white ones against school bonds? What caused the collapse of the stone arch bridge at Mill Creek?

To illustrate I pick out one query: Was I working for the best interest of the county when as a member of the board, I or my relative built the cheap wooden Samsell bridge? Answer. The Samsell bridge was built a year or two before I became a member of the board, it was built while Wm. Crooks was member from this district. Wm. Cronk was the contractor if I recollect right, and, except that I go back as far as Adam and Eve, not a relation of mine.

But one thing Gutzy for once admitted namely that he took boodle from Bill King, he says: "No wrong was done no law violated." Well, if he wants to quiet his conscience in this way I pity the poor political prostitute. And now let him go a step further and answer how much boodle did you get? Was it used in buying that barrel of whiskey and why did you not pay for that keg of beer also? And as you are in a confessing mood, tell us also how much, if any, boodle did you get in boosting these first iron bridge on the county and run down and drown out all opposition to that most abominable steal on the county. By giving me the figures, I may be enabled to answer your questions in regard to the cost of them more to the point. Look over the files of your sheet right after the meeting of the committee in Delano and you will find that you used the classic expression, "Bill Ziebarth kicked like a wild steer." Yes, I kicked because I saw that the bids were $5000.00 higher than promised to us and about $2500 higher than the estimates had been. But all that I could do was to prevent the Rockford bridge from being contracted for at the same time, I saved a cold $5000.00 to the tax payers and that was enough for one day, and the Rockford bridge was not built until the two men from this county who voted for the acceptance of those bids were shelved. Yes, I then built the Rockford bridge for 26⅔ dollars per lineal foot while the two Franfort bridges cost more than double that sum per foot and that Rockford bridge was let by advertizement to the lowest bidder and not like you built the Delano bridge later on the plan of "you tickle me and I tickle you."

World's Fair Notes.

The last will and testament of Queen Isabella, in which she make a number of references to the new world, will be a very interesting object in the Spanish exhibit at the World's Fair.

Exhibits for the Women's building are required to be in the building by March 15, at which time an expert committee of the Board of Lady Managers will pass upon them to determine their fitness for exhibition.

Two white kangaroos will appear in the New South Wales exhibit. These are exceedingly rare animals. Only one other living specimen is known to exist, and that is an an attraction in the Royal Aquarium in London.

The various transportation lines between the central portion of Chicago and the World's Fair grounds will be able to carry upwards of 100,000 people an hour.

An engine built by James Watt, Lancashire, England, in 1815, will be exhibited at the World's Fair in the Transportation department. It is owned by John Rourke & Son, Savannah, Ga., and has been continuously in use since built.

The Lairds, shipbuilders in Birkenhead, will exhibit at the World's Fair models of vessels showing the progress made in the construction of transatlantic liners since they were first run between New York and Liverpool.

Hennepin County Schools.

The County Commissioners, at their March meeting last Monday, were again confronted by Superintendent of Schools Lewis and his ex-assistant, Shaver, and asked to re-consider their action of a month ago and confirm Mr. Shaver's re-appointment. Several petitions were read bearing in all 100 signatures mostly the names of persons residing in the vicinity of Lake Minnetonka in behalf of Mr. Shaver. Several residents of the rural districts were also admitted to speak for Mr. Shaver; but these speeches, like the general make up of the indiyiduals delivering them, were not weighty enough to influence the commissioners to a decision favorable to the ex-assistant and Mr. Shaver'scase was not re-considered. Commissioner Nash informed Sup't. Lewis who was present that the board had received many complaints from districts throughout the county about the school superyision during the past two years and as the people were taxed $6000.00 a term for this service the commissioners proposed to see to it that this money would not be paid out for nothing in the future. Shaver has the same as been rejected three times already, and his best friends are advising him to step aside with quiet, manly dignity. but he and Lewis propose to bother the commissioners again at their next meeting. Shaver's undignified course is making him the subject of a great deal of adverse criticism. He goes about telling the people that the assistant superintendency is his bread and butter and he must have it. He is a robust fellow, as stout as an ox, and could work like other people if he would.

COL. ALEXANDER C. BOSKIN, the lieutenant governor of Montana, is paralyzed from the waist down, and has not walked for many years. The colonel is an able lawyer, and held many positions of trust while Montana was a territory. He is a forcible speaker, and his invalid's chair is a familiar sight on the political platforms of the state.

AN aluminum violin has been constructed by a musician of Cincinnati and has been tried in concert as well as in private. It cannot be distinguished by its tone from the wooden instrument. It is claimed that it is superior to wood in durability, freedom from accident and susceptibility to moisture. It is too early in the history of the new industry to tell of its comparative cost.

THERE has been a great yearly diminution during the last ten years in the number of soldiers in military or civil prisons in England and Wales. In 1884 there were 1,117 soldiers in English prisons; in 1891 there were 433; and on the 31st of last December there were but 44. Last year not one soldier was sentenced to penal servitude. The expulsions for misconduct have decreased since 1888 from 2,020 to 1,590.

THE number of deaths among millionaires during the past few months must have struck even the careless observer. Most of these dead millionaires, too, had not reached the Biblical age of threescore and ten. One would think that with great wealth would come the power to purchase such skillful cooks and doctors—we put cooks first advisedly—that millionaires' lives would be prolonged far beyond 70. Not so—they do not live as long as paupers.

MASSACHUSETTS can be depended upon to furnish attorney generals to order. Mr. Olney makes the sixth that the Bay state has contributed since the organization of the government. They are Theophilus Parsons, Levi Lincoln, Caleb Cushing, Ebenezer R. Hoar, Charles Devens and the present Mr. Olney. Pennsylvania has also furnished six, viz: William Bradford, Richard Rush, Henry D. Gilpin, Jeremiah S. Black, Wayne MacVeagh and Benjamin H. Brewster. Since the organization of the government there have been forty attorney generals.

A NEWSPAPER in Boston reports the result of a practical test with a chemical preparation to be sprayed over soft coal, which is then fed into the furnace in the usual manner. The coal becomes absolutely smokeless in the offensive sense of the term. Some white smoke passes out of the chimney, but it is a consequence of perfect combustion. It is said that the coal so treated burns better and lasts longer than without the use of the chemical, besides which it is a disinfectant, and the cost of treatment is very small. As it is the invention of a practical gas man, there may be something in it.

IT is an acknowledged fact that a great age is attained by women oftener than by men. Tissot, with doubtful gallantry, accounts for this by declaring that the large amount of talking for which women are famous is a very healthy exercise and promotes the circulation of the blood without over-exerting the organs. Another reason given is the quieter and more regular life led by women, whose nervous system and brains are consequently not worn out so quickly as those of men. The talking theory, however, is a cheerful one to take, and may be lived up to with as little sacrifice as any.

IF luxury goes on increasing, fortunes will have to do likewise, for even now, in order to be in the swim, women, and men, also, must spend for their clothing alone sums which twenty-five years ago would have more than amply sufficed to keep a big family in comfort. Glance at the increase of expenditure during the last few years on dress. Not long ago $5,000 a year would have been considered fit pin money for a countess, but now a smartly-dressed woman will not keep out of debt on such a dress allowance. And this is but an incidental, everything else being in keeping with it.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES.

Items Regarding the Doings of Legislators at the Capitol.

The investigating committee called for in the resolution of Senator Keller promises to be the most important investigating committee of the session. The main object of the investigation is to look into the matter of pine stumpage taxation. The pine stumpage on state lands, it is well known, is sold to lumbermen. The title to the land remains in the state and only the pine is sold. The lumber, however, is generally as valuable as the land on which it grows, and the object of the investigation is to ascertain why the l o'ders are not taxed the same as owners of other property. Senator Keller says the ownership of the pine constitutes a property right and a value, and the right should be taxed the same as other property.

From Representative Hopkins of Watonwan and the house republicans comes a suggestion regarding the investment of the surplus state school funds, which is thrown out for consideration of the state, with a desire that the sentiment of the counties, through the country press, be ascertained regarding it. It is that the counties and towns needing loans, and obliged to use their bonds, be allowed by a law carefully guarded, to borrow from the surplus school funds, instead of going into the public market with their bonds, often at a disadvantage and at comparatively high rates of interest. The funds, for example, are invested in other state bonds at a low rate, say 3 per cent. If the counties have to pay twice as much, such investment would make a big difference in favor of the school fund. It is only as yet a mere suggestion, but if favorably met from the country, some of the house leaders would be willing to take up and put in shape a measure to cover it.

The senate is going to find out whether all of the pine lands in the northern part of the state are paying their just taxes, and proposes to do this by means of an investigating committee. Senator Keller introduced a resolution which said that it was generally known that there were large quantities of land and personal property in the state belonging to private parties which escape entire or partial taxation by means of influence with corrupt county officials, etc., and then appoints a commission of three senators to at once investigate into the matter in the most thorough manner possible. The resolution was adopted, and Senators Keller, Donnelly and J. D. Smith are the senators appointed to make the investigation.

Investigation as to the supposed defect in section 1, of the anti-scalper bill, as to the fees, is said to have convinced the legislators that the bill will not need amendment. Capt. Van Sant, author of the bill, had stated on the floor that he would offer a bill correcting the supposed error. He stated, however, that he had the portion examined, and ascertained that the fees which go into the secretary of state's office are all turned over to the state treasurer. The bill would not, therefore, increase the secretary of state's salary.

Senator Wood introduced a bill to provide a method of distribution of the gross earnings tax. He wants 30 per cent of it to go to the counties through which the roads run to be distributed in ratio to their mileage. Eight cents per acre is to be paid counties in which railroad lands are situated and the balance is to remain in the state treasury.

The first fruit of the Sevatson grain investigation was the bill introduced by the chairman of the committee. The bill seeks to compel better care and insure protection to grain at terminal points, and is the result of the evidence secured that the losses at terminals are caused by pilfering and leaky cars. Among the provisions are these: The grain inspector is required to examine all cars for leaks or broken seals and after inspection to reseal the cars with a special seal. The railroad companies are required to provide sufficient police protection.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Doings of the State Law Makers at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, March 2.—The Markham bill occupied nearly the whole time of the senate today. It was taken up at the morning session and was still undisposed of when an adjournment was taken at the afternoon session. At the morning session Senators Hompe and March argued against the bill. In the afternoon Senator Tawney was again heard in advocacy and Senator Sanborn in opposition. The friends of the bill were reinforced by Senator Donnelly, who made a strong speech in favor of it. A number of other senators spoke, most of them supporting the bill. At 5 o'clock it became evident that the discussion could not be terminated tonight and the bill was made a special order for Tuesday next at 2:30 p. m.

In the house the Cairns anti-screen bill was knocked out in committee of the whole this afternoon, and probably will not be resurrected this session.

The anti-scalper or railway ticket bill was reached and the fight pro and con was strong and earnest. The bill was the last of a calendar upon which two full hours of rapid work had been spent. Several speeches were made pro and con, Mr. Van Sant, the author of the bill, leading off with a rattling speech in favor of the railroad boys, the conductors. The vote was ayes, 73; nays, 29. So that the bill was passed with 15 votes to spare, 58 being the required number.

The status of the bill now that is so amended that it will require the railroad companies to redeem the unused portions of tickets at the same rate paid for them.

The Greer-Nelson grain and warehouse bill, known as the governor's bill, was taken up. The republicans favoring the measure against the balance of the house. Upon final call there were 67 ayes, 36 nays and 11 absentees.

ST. PAUL, March 3.—In the senate the following bills were introduced: To provide for the care and protection of grain at terminal points, ordered printed and placed on general orders; disposal of gross earnings law; repealing state board of charities; amending the bill relating to assessments.

The afternoon session was spent in committee of the whole, with barely a quorum present. The only important action taken was the favorable report on Lienau's bill changing the arrangement of the official ballot. The bill in its present shape provides that the candidates of each party shall be grouped in separate party votes. It requires an X opposite each candidate to be voted for except the presidential electors, all of whom may be voted for by one X at the head of the presidential ticket.

Senator Sevatson moved to amend the bill by changing the square for marking from the front to after the names. The object was to prevent confusion, the square under the present system being after the name. The amendment was adopted and the bill as amended was recommended to pass.

The house, in the forenoon session, cleaned up every species of work before it, including its calendar, up to work of committee of the whole. Of the latter there is, however, an immense accumulation, 119 bills, besides those added today. The house, in its calendar, passed the measure, in the interest of farmers, to loan money of the state, through the counties and towns, to farmers who lost crops last year, for seed grain. The appropriation therefor is $75,000.

In the afternoon some 25 bills were agreed to for passage. The bill of Mr. Howard creating a bureau of labor and defining its duties, which has been specially urged by the Trades and Labor assemblies, and which has been managed by the labor leaders of the house, developed more difference of opinion, mainly as to the details.

ST. PAUL, March 4.—In the senate there was but one bill to be introduced. It was by Senator Allen, and provided for guarding against forest and prairie fires.

Senator Canestorp tried to get the rules suspended and the bill making a seed grain loan of $75,000 passed, and seemed hurt to find that one or two senators objected to passing a bill appropriating that amount of money without having had a chance to see the bill and read it over. The objectors were obdurate, however, and finally compromised by making the matter a special order for next Tuesday at 11 o'clock.

In the house Mr. Winter offered a resolution providing for a recess between the hours of 11 and 12 this morning in order that the time during which the inauguration ceremonies were in progress at Washington might be spent in listening to short addresses from the members, which, he said, would further cement the good feeling between the members of the respective political parties in the house. The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Telegrams of congratulations were sent to the retiring and incoming presidents.

In the afternoon Mr. Horton introduced a bill authorizing park boards in cities to issue certificates of indebtedness for the maintenance and improvement of parks. The certificates are to be payable in not more than three years and to bear interest at 5 per cent. It went to the judiciary committee.

ST. PAUL, March 6.—The senate spent most of today's session in committee of the whole. Among the bills recommended to pass were Leavitt's bill forbidding attorneys to take cases on shares, and Maguire's bill to compel railroads to construct switches and sidetracks to elevators. The appropriation for completing the Fergus Falls insane hospital was passed and another investigation was ordered.

The following new bills were introduced: Repealing chapter 101 of the general laws of 1879; prohibiting the lowering or widening of inland lake outlets; to prevent the making of contracts for the payment of money in one metal to the exclusion of the other; repealing chapter 181 of the laws of 1881, relating to timber culture; regulating Lloyd or individual insurance organization; providing that county printing shall be let to the lowest bidder; amending the law relating to the preservation of life and protection of passengers; joint resolution favoring the pending 16th amendment to the federal constitution; proposing an amendment to the constitution expunging the amendment adopted last fall prohibiting special legislation.

In the morning hour the house after the introduction of only one new bill suspended the rules and took up the long list of general orders. There were 139 bills. Among those recommended to pass were Senator John Day Smith's two bills to prevent cruelty to animals, and the McEwen bill to purchase the battle field of Birch Coolie and to erect a monument.

In the afternoon, one-half of the entire calendar was disposed of, 13 bills passed and two defeated. Of the latter was the Neilsson eight-hour a day labor bill.

The house passed a joint resolution of respect to the memory of Hon. Hans Mattson.

The following bills were passed: To legalize conveyances of married women; sheriffs to complete mortgage sales after term of office; relating to duties of justices of the peace; amendatory of the penal code (this law relates to the state reform school and contemplates releases of the young sentenced there when their conduct warrants); relating to civil actions against receivers, requiring them to be brought in the counties where the cause of action was laid; conferring the same powers on corporations organized under special acts as those organized under general laws; on the qualifications of teachers, and making a system of teachers' certificates; requiring railroad companies to make their round trip tickets good in either direction; to provide for county teachers' institutes; creating a bureau of labor and labor statistics and defining its duties; to provide for the poor by counties; relating to clerks to probate judges, they are empowered to call the calendar and take testimony of witnesses in certain cases; to provide for the organization of new counties.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

The Hiawatha Statue.

The public at St. Paul were permitted to the women's auxiliary board of the Minnesota world's fair commission for the statue of Hiawatha. The accepted design was made by Jacob Fjelde of Minneapolis and is an effort worthy of the artist. The sculptor brings into the model, small as it is, a wonderful amount of life. Hiawatha is portrayed holding the form of Minnehaha closely in his arms, and the balancing under his burden and steadiness of stride through the imaginary "rushing" waters, the clasp of the arms and expression of the faces is remarkably realistic, promising almost perfection in the statue. The statue will be made in plaster and placed at the entrance of the Minnesota state building at the world's fair, and afterward done in bronze for the adornment of Minnehaha park, being so located that it will overlook the immortalized falls. The completed statue will be of life size, and will cost in all probability $3,000. The base will bear an inscription explaining that the school children of Minnesota, by their penny subscriptions, almost entirely paid for the monument. This fund has now reached the sum of $1,000, and it is probable that the state commission will contribute to it $1,000 more. Mrs. L. P. Hunt of Mankato has personally conducted the work pertaining to these penny subscriptions, attending to the immense labor of corresponding with the teachers of the 7,000 schools in the state. The rapid progress of the work is undoubtedly due largely to Mrs. Hunt's indefatigable energy in its behalf. The designs for a state flag were also submitted, and that made by Mrs. Amelia Center of Minneapolis was accepted and awarded the first prize of $15. The design for this will not, however, be exhibited for some time to come.

$5,000 Short.

Peter Corran, of Chippewa Falls, Wis., claims to have been robbed of $5,000 while in St. Paul. Corran's story, as related to the police, runs as follows: Tuesday he drew this money from the Chippewa Falls bank and started for his camp at Moose Lake, Minn., to pay off his men. Wednesday he spent in St. Paul and early in the evening he went down to the union depot to await the departure of the 11:15 train for Duluth. Telling the station master his destination, he sat down in the waiting room and fell asleep. When the depot man woke him at about 11 o'clock, he found that his vest had been cut and the $5,000, which his wife had sewed in the inner lining, had been taken. There is no clue to the thief.

Claims He Saw Heaven.

Geo. Wunderlich of Red Wing, who has for some time been suffering from stricture of the stomach, has a curious story to relate. About a week ago he passed into a trance and was unconscious for several hours, and he maintains that during that time he was in heaven, spoke with Jesus and the angels. But Jesus said he was not ready to receive him yet, and so the angels lowered him little by little until he was in a place of darkness. Suddenly he was seized with a pain and regained consciousness.

G. A. R. Officers.

John Day Smith, commander of the department of Minnesota, Grand Army of the Republic, has made the following appointments of staff officers:

J. K. Mertz, Minneapolis, assistant adjutant general.

E. N. Leavens, Faribault, assistant quartermaster general.

Reuben C. Benton, Minneapolis, judge advocate.

Harrison White, Beaver Creek, department inspector.

Attempted Robbery.

An attempt was made last night by J. Harity and companion to rob Messrs. Bemis and Young, brakeman and fireman, respectively, on the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha road at Mankato. The latter had received their monthly pay during the day. They were successful in their struggle with the robbers and escaped without losing any money.

Forged Checks.

A young man named Geo. E. Breyer, claiming to be from the East, undertook to rob the merchants of Anoka by the wholesale passing of forged checks. His work was very bungling and was easily detected, but not until after four or five firms had been victimized.

GROVER IN CHARGE.

President Cleveland Takes the Oath of Office.

The Ceremonies Marred by a Snowstorm —A Magnificent Parade and a Gorgeous Ball—Full Text of the Inaugural Address.

SWORN IN.

WASHINGTON, March 6.—Grover Cleveland, of New York, thrice nominated for president of the United States and twice elected, has again been inducted into that high office for his second term, with all appropriate ceremonies and the gathering of a mighty multitude, and with the accompaniment of a blinding snow-storm.

Many Did Not March.

Had the atmospheric conditions been anything like favorable, instead of being as bad as could possibly be, there would probably have been 60,000 men and a number of ladies marching or riding in the parade, against 25,000 in 1885. They were all here waiting to fall in line, but at the last moment some of the organizations were compelled to desist from participating. Nevertheless, the occasion was memorable by the vast attendance.

Scenes Along the Line of March.

The scene along the line of march was such as no city but Washington and no street but the broad, well-paved Pennsylvania avenue could produce. The public and private stands erected along the line of march from the capitol to a point beyond the white house had an estimated seating capacity of 60,000 persons. Every foot of standing room along the route of the procession, fully 2 miles in length, was occupied; windows commanding a view of the parade brought fabulous prices, and advantageous seats on the public stands commanded prices ranging from five dollars up and down.

The Reviewing Stand.

The main stand from which President Cleveland reviewed the parade was erected immediately in front of the white house. It was decorated with effective taste. In the center was an arch 42 feet high, handsomely draped and surmounted by the arms of the United States. On the extreme right was the coat of arms of New York (Mr. Cleveland's state); on the extreme left was the coat of arms of Illinois (Vice President Stevenson's state), and between them were displayed the armorial bearings of the other members of the thirteen original states. Cushioned seats were provided for the president and his cabinet, who surrounded him; and folding chairs were supplied for the diplomatic corps, who were arranged immediately behind him. On both sides were seats for senators, members of the house of representatives and specially-invited guests.

Was an Imposing Parade.

Capitol hill, far as the eye could reach from the eastern front of the capitol, was an undulating sea of humanity, assembled to witness the administering of the oath of office to the new president by the chief justice of the United States and to hear, as many of them as could get within ear shot, the inaugural address.

The parade was greater in numbers and more imposing in military and civic display than that of any previous inauguration. Gen. Martin F. McMahon, of New York, the grand marshal, carried out the same admirable methods which made his management of the Columbian parade in New York city last October so successful. He was ably assisted by his adjutant general, Col. N. C. Corbin, United States army.

The Military.

The escorting division, composed of artillery, cavalry and infantry of the regular army, assembled in the neighborhood of the white house and the war, state and navy buildings, and formed in columns of sections of twelve each, promptly at 10:30. They marched down the avenue, accompanying the presidential party from the white house to the capitol prior to the inauguration. All the rest of the parade assembled below the capitol and marched from the capitol 2 miles up the avenue after the inauguration ceremonies were over and disbanded at the Washington circle.

Civil Organizations.

The civic procession, under the marshalship of Col. William Dickson, was in six divisions, and aggregated more than 20,000 men, and quite a noticeable dash of lady equestrians. Tammany, with its gorgeous new banners and badges, held the right of line. The second division was assigned to Pennsylvania; Massachusetts, New Jersey and Delaware had the third division; Maryland the fourth; the fifth was the western division, and the sixth was made up of the later arriving organizations. The bicycle clubs of Washington and Baltimore brought up the rear.

Incidents of the Parade.

A detailed report of the great parade is, of course, impossible, when a mere enumeration of the various regiments, companies, posts and civic organizations participating occupies three newspaper columns. But some of the notes and incidents of the parade are here set down at random.

Among the magnificently mounted special aides who rode behind Grand Marshal McMahon and Chief of Staff Gen. W. D. Whipple, were representatives from every state and territory in the union. The guard of honor of President Cleveland consisted of 100 members of the New York Business Men's Cleveland and Stevenson association.

A feature distinctively novel was introduced into the parade by the engineering corps. This was the releasing of a number of carrier pigeons with messages relating to the success of the inauguration, destined for Philadelphia, Baltimore, Annapolis and other points. Still another military feature was afforded by the military bicycle company, who, mounted upon their wheels, and at the same time handling their small arms with dexterity, gave proof that this innovation in military tactics lacked nothing of success.

White House to Capitol.

At 10:30, at the sound of the long-roll beaten by drummers stationed in the little park in front of the white house, the presidential party and its escort started on their journey from the white house to the capitol. There was a wild huzza from a thousand throats as the carriage bearing the president and president-elect came in sight, preceded by Grand Marshal McMahon and staff. President-elect Cleveland and President Harrison both raised their hats in response to the popular salute. Slowly the first brigade of the escort division in advance of the presidential party started in measured tread up the historic Pennsylvania avenue towards the capitol, the vice president-elect and the senate committee on arrangements following in carriages in the rear of the president. Another wild cheer greeted the appearance of Vice President-elect Stevenson. The members of President Harrison's cabinet, Major-Gen. Schofield, commanding the army, and the senior admiral of the navy followed in the order named, and the Second brigade of the Second division brought up the rear.

Fifty Thousand in Line.

It was a splendid procession, too, with more than 50,000 democrats in line. Nothing like it has ever been seen in Washington, so the oldest inhabitant said. Not even the famous review of the returning victorious army of Grant exceeded the pageant. It was somewhat heterogeneous, to be sure, but it was impressive for all that. It was more truly representative of the American people than any merely military columns could have been. It included regiments of regular United States troops, cavalry, infantry and artillery, led by the veteran Scofield, commander-in-chief of the federal army. Then there came detachments of marines, companies of cadets from the naval school and embryo warriors from West Point. To these succeeded the armed forces of the sovereign states, from New York, New Jersey, Georgia, Massachusetts, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland, Wisconsin and Louisiana, companies or regiments of the citizen soldiery, well named the national guard.

Besides this pomp of war and glitter and gold braid and dazzle of gilded epaulets the black costumes of the civic organizations looked tame. But the political clubs were as truly representative of the nation as were the uniformed men, and their absence would have detracted from the character of the procession. There were hundreds of these clubs. They came from many states of the union and celebrate the culminating scene in the democratic triumph of last November. There were democratic associations from Illinois, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Kentucky, Ohio, Massachusetts, Maryland, Indiana, Iowa, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Louisiana, Wisconsin and Georgia.

Cleveland Sworn In.

Arriving at the capitol the soldiers and civilians formed in the streets radiating from the grounds and awaited the time of marching.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND AND HIS CABINET.

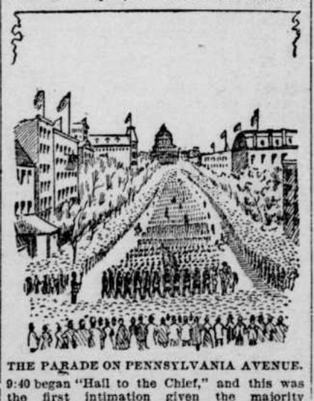
Each thoroughfare reaching away from Capitol hill held a regiment or club or several of them. The place which was assigned was on Delaware avenue directly in line with the platform on which stood President Cleveland when he took the oath of office. Patiently the troops and marching clubs waited. At last the inaugural ceremonies were over. The new president had finished his address, the senators, representatives and diplomates formed in stately procession to return to the capitol. From the west side of the capitol a single gun thundered the welcome signal to start.

The Return.

There was clanking of swords and grasping of guns and hoisting of banners and general "dressing up" of the ranks. Slowly at first and then more swiftly the column of 50,000 men moved to the blare and rumble of bugle and drum from 100 bands. Down the broad, long reach of Pennsylvania avenue it swept and on and up the ascent to the white house, where it passed in review before the president, ex-president and the dignitaries of the nation and of foreign lands. A few blocks further west, to Washington circle, it moved and then disintegrated. All along this route, about a mile and a half, the way was lined with humanity. At any available point stands had been erected and in these thousands of persons were seated. Other thousands stood on streets or sidewalk and watched the civic-military pageant sweep by. It was a splendid parade, well planned and efficiently accomplished.

The Ball.

The inaugural ball was held at night in the spacious hall of the pension building. The decorations were the most elaborate in the history of affairs of its kind. Those in attendance numbered fully 10,000. The Marine band at



THE PARADE ON PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

9:40 began "Hail to the Chief," and this was the first intimation given the majority of those present that President and Mrs. Cleveland had arrived. They were accompanied by a retinue of friends and without going to the rooms reserved for them the president and his wife started on a tour of the ballroom. The president led the way on the arm of Gen. Schofield, while Mrs. Cleveland followed under escort of Justice Gray of the supreme court.

A few minutes only were consumed in the circuit of the ballroom, and then Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland and their party went upstairs to their apartments and there received a large number of prominent persons, including senators, representatives, foreign ministers and officers of the army and navy. The coming secretary of the navy, Mr. Herbert, there joined the party with Miss Herbert.

Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland left the ball-room shortly before 10:30 o'clock. Their departure was made so quietly that but few people were aware of it, and a great multitude gathered about the stairway leading to the presidential apartments and remained there for some time after the president and his wife had left the hall.

The vice presidential party arrived at the hour of 10, and a circuit of the hall was made in a manner similar to that of the presidential party. Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson, with their son, daughters and friends who accompanied them to Washington, then joined the president and Mrs. Cleveland in their rooms.

Precisely at 12 o'clock the band struck up "Home, Sweet Home," and the assemblage quietly dispersed.

THE INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

President Cleveland Outlines His Policy on Many Issues.

WASHINGTON, March 6.—The following is the full text of the inaugural address of President Grover Cleveland, delivered immediately before he had taken the oath of office:

"MY FELLOW CITIZENS: In obedience to the mandate of my countrymen I am about to dedicate myself to their service under the sanction of a solemn oath. Deeply moved by the expression of confidence and personal attachment which has called me to this service, I am sure my gratitude can make no better return than the pledge I now give before God and these witnesses of unreserved and complete devotion to the interests and welfare of those who have honored me.

"I deem it fitting on this occasion, while indicating the opinions I hold concerning public questions of present importance, to also briefly refer to the existence of certain conditions and tendencies among our people which seem to menace the integrity and usefulness of their government.

Must Be Watchful.

"While every American citizen must contemplate with the utmost pride and enthusiasm the growth and expansion of our country, the sufficiency of our institutions to stand against the rudest shocks of violence, the wonderful thrift and enterprise of our people, and the demonstrated superiority of our free government, it behooves us to constantly watch for every symptom of insidious infirmity that threatens our national vigor. The strong man who, in the confidence of sturdy health, courts the sternest activities of life and rejoices in the hardihood of constant labor, may still have lurking near his vitals the unheeded disease that dooms him to sudden collapse. It cannot be doubted that our stupendous achievements as a people and our country's robust strength have given rise to a heedlessness of those laws governing our national health which we can no more evade than human life can escape the laws of God and nature.

Will Maintain Our Credit.

"Manifestly nothing is more vital to our supremacy as a nation and to the beneficent purposes of our government than a sound and stable currency. Its exposure to degradation should at once arouse to activity the most enlightened statesmanship, and the danger of depreciation in the purchasing power of the wages paid to toil should furnish the strongest incentive to prompt and conservative action.

"In dealing with our present embarrassing situation, as related to this subject, we will be wise if we temper our confidence and faith in our national strength and resources with the frank concession that even these will not permit us to defy with impunity the inexorable laws of finance and trade. At the same time, in our efforts to adjust differences of opinions we should be free from intolerance or passion, and our judgments should be unmoved by alluring phrases and unvexed by selfish interests.

"I am confident that such an approach to the subject will result in prudent and effective remedial legislation. In the meantime, so far as the executive branch of the government can intervene, none of the powers with which it is invested will be withheld, when their exercise is deemed necessary to maintain our national credit or avert financial disaster.

Dangers of Paternalism.

"Closely related to the exaggerated confidence in our country's greatness which tends to a disregard of the rules of national safety, another danger confronts us not less serious. I refer to the prevalence of a popular disposition to expect from the operation of the government especial and direct individual advantages. The verdict of our voters, which condemned the injustice of maintaining protection for protection's sake, enjoins upon the people's servants the duty of exposing and destroying the brood of kindred evils which are the unwholesome progeny of paternalism.

"This is the bane of republican institutions and the constant peril of our government by the people. It degrades to the purposes of wily craft the plan of rule our fathers established and bequeathed to us as an object of our love and veneration. It perverts the patriotic sentiment of our countrymen and tempts them to a pitiful calculation of the sordid gain to be derived from their government's maintenance. It undermines the self-reliance of our people and substitutes in its place dependence upon governmental favoritism. It stifles the spirit of true Americanism and stupefies every ennobling trait of American citizenship.

"The lessons of paternalism ought to be unlearned and the better lesson taught that, while the people should patriotically and cheerfully support their government, its functions do not include the support of the people.

"The acceptance of this principle leads to a refusal of bounties and subsidies, which burden the labor and thrift of a portion of our citizens to aid ill-advised or languishing enterprises in which they have no concern. It leads also to a challenge of wild and reckless pension expenditure, which overleaps the bounds of grateful recognition of patriotic service and prostitutes to vicious uses the people's prompt and generous impulse to aid those disabled in their country's defense.

Economy and Frugality.

"Every thoughtful American must realize the importance of checking at its beginning any tendency in public or private station to regard frugality and economy as virtues which we may safely outgrow. The toleration of this idea results in the waste of the people's money by their chosen servants and encourages prodigality and extravagance in the home life of our countrymen. Under our scheme of government the waste of public money is a crime against the citizen; and the contempt of our people for economy and frugality in their personal affairs deplorably saps the strength and sturdiness of our national character.

"It is a plain dictate of honesty and good government that public expenditures should be limited by public necessity, and that this should be measured by the rules of strict economy; and it is equally clear that frugality among the people is the best guaranty of a contented and strong support of free institutions.

Civil Service Reform.

"One mode of the misappropriation of public funds is avoided when appointments to office, instead of being the rewards of partisan activity, are awarded to those whose efficiency promises a fair return of work for the compensation paid to them. To secure the fitness and competency of appointees to office, and to remove from political action the demoralizing madness for spoils, civil service reform has found a place in our public policy and laws. The benefits already gained through this instrumentality and the further usefulness it promises entitle it to the hearty support and encouragement of all who desire to see our public service well performed, or who hope for the elevation of political sentiment and the purification of political methods.

Monopolies and Trusts.

"The existence of immense aggregations of kindred enterprises and combinations of business interests formed for the purpose of limiting production and fixing prices is inconsistent with the fair field which ought to be open to every independent activity. Legitimate strife in business should not be superseded by an enforced concession to the demands of combinations that have the power to destroy; nor should the people to be served lose the benefit of cheapness, which usually results from wholesome competition.

"These aggregations and combinations frequently constitute conspiracies against the interests of the people, and in all their phases they are unnatural and opposed to our American sense of fairness. To the extent that they can be reached and restrained by federal power, the general government should relieve our citizens from their interference and exactions.

Equal Rights.

"Loyalty to the principles upon which our government rests positively demands that the equality before the law which it guarantees to every citizen should be justly and in good faith conceded in all parts of the land. The enjoyment of this right follows the badge of citizenship wherever found, and, unimpaired by race or color, it appeals for recognition to American manliness and fairness.

CLEVELAND TAKES THE OATH.

"Our relations with the Indians located within our borders impose upon us responsibilities we cannot escape. Humanity and consistency require us to treat them with forbearance, and in our dealings with them to honestly and considerately regard their rights and interests. Every effort should be made to lead them through the paths of civilization and education to self supporting and independent citizenship. In the meantime, as the nation's wards, they should be promptly defended against the cupidity of designing men and shielded from every influence or temptation that retards their advancement.

Tariff Reform.

"The people of the United States have decreed that on this day the control of their government in its legislative and executive branches shall be given to a political party pledged in the most positive terms to the accomplishment of tariff reform. They have thus determined in favor of a more just and equitable system of federal taxation. The agents they have chosen to carry out their purposes are bound by their promises not less than by the command of their masters, to devote themselves unremittingly to this service.

"While there should be no surrender of principle, our task must be undertaken wisely and without vindictiveness. Our mission is not punishment, but the rectification of wrongs. If, in lifting burdens from the daily life of our people, we reduce inordinate and unequal advantages too long enjoyed, this is but a necessary incident of our return to right and justice. If we exact from unwilling minds acquiescence in the theory of an honest distribution of the fund of governmental beneficence treasured up for all, we but insist upon a principle which underlies our free institutions. When we tear aside the delusions and misconceptions which have blinded our countrymen to their condition under vicious tariff laws we but show them how far they have been led away from the paths of contentment and prosperity. When we proclaim that the necessity for revenue to support the government furnishes the only justification for taxing the people, we announce a truth so plain that its denial would seem to indicate the extent to which judgment may be influenced by familiarity with perversions of the taxing power: and when we seek to reinstate the self confidence and business enterprise of our citizens, by discrediting an abject dependence upon governmental favor, we strive to stimulate those elements of American character which support the hope of American achievement.

"Anxiety for the redemption of the pledges which my party has made and solicitude for the complete justification of the trust the people have reposed in us, constrain me to remind those with whom I am to cooperate that we can succeed in doing the work which has been especially set before us only by the most sincere, harmonious and disinterested effort. Even if insuperable obstacles and opposition prevent the consummation of our task, we shall hardly be excused: and if failure can be traced to our fault or neglect we may be sure the people will hold us to a swift and exacting accountability.

To Defend and Protect the Constitution.

"The oath I now take to preserve, protect and defend the constitution of the United States, not only impressively defines the great responsibility I assume, but suggests obedience to constitutional commands as the rule by which my official conduct must be guided. I shall, to the best of my ability, and within my sphere of duty, preserve the constitution by loyally protecting every grant of federal power it contains, by defending all its restraints when attacked by impatience and restlessness and by enforcing its limitations and reservations in favor of the states and the people.

Wise and Patriotic Support.

"Fully impressed with the gravity of the duties that confront me, mindful of my weakness, I should be appalled if it were my lot to bear unaided the responsibilities which await me. I am, however, saved from discouragement when I remember that I shall have the support and the counsel and cooperation of wise and patriotic men who will stand at my side in cabinet places or will represent the people in their legislative halls.

"I find also much comfort in remembering that my countrymen are just and generous and in the assurance that they will not condemn those who by sincere devotion to their service deserve their forbearance and approval.

Conclusion.

"Above all, I know there is a Supreme Being who rules the affairs of men and whose goodness and mercy have always followed the American people; and I know He will not turn from us now if we humbly seek His powerful aid."

KILLED HIS PLAYMATE.

Self-Confessed Crime of a Colored Boy Only Thirteen Years of Age.

COLUMBUS, O., March 6.—Oliver Johnson, colored, 13 years old, murdered Stanley Hott, white, aged 5, and threw the body into the Scioto river. The Hott boy failed to appear at his home, and an investigation was started, resulting in the arrest of young Johnson. Upon being pressed by the police Johnson confessed that he killed Hott with a hatchet and threw the body over the Mound street bridge. They quarreled in their play. The body has not yet been recovered.

Cut Her Child's Throat.

FORD, Ky., March 6.—Mrs. Mollie Hambrick cut the throat of her 8-year-old daughter with a razor. The child died in a few moments, when the mother made an attempt to cut her own throat, but was prevented. Mrs. Hambrick's elder daughter died recently, and the loss so preyed on her mind that she several times threatened suicide.

For women approaching confinement, nursing mothers, and every weak, run-down, delicate women, it is an invigorating, supporting tonic that's peculiarly adapted to their needs.

But it's more than that, too. It's the only guaranteed remedy for all the functional disturbances, painful disorders, and chronic weaknesses of womanhood. In "female complaints" of every kind, periodical pains, bearing-down sensations, internal inflammation, and kindred ailments, if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

"German Syrup"

Mr. Albert Hartley of Hudson, N. C., was taken with Pneumonia. His brother had just died from it. When he found his doctor could not rally him he took one bottle of German Syrup and came out sound and well. Mr. S. B. Gardiner, Clerk with Druggist J. E. Barr, Aurora, Texas, prevented a bad attack of pneumonia by taking German Syrup in time. He was in the business and knew the danger. He used the great remedy—Boschee's German Syrup—for lung diseases. ®

What to do with Milk Pails!

Clean them with Pearline. You can't get them so thoroughly sweet and pure in any other way. Besides, it's easier for you—quicker, more economical.

"The box and barrel churn are not hard to keep clean. A little hot water and a little Pearline will clean any churn or do away with any bad odor."—The Dairy World, Chicago.

Perhaps you think that some of the imitations of Pearline, that you'd be afraid to use in washing clothes, would do just as well in work like this. They wouldn't hurt tinware, certainly. But they wouldn't clean it, either, half as well as Pearline—besides, "don't play with the fire." If your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 400 JAMES PYLE, New York.

SPURGEON WROTE

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.
Yours heartily,
(Rev.) C. H. SPURGEON,

DELANO DIARY

—Fresh Oysters at C. H. Green & Co's Grocery.

--Call at this office for a story book, found near Jacob Henn's place.

--Rev. Frank R. Millspaugh will be at Delano, for services, Monday night, the 13th.

—Prof. Dewey is talking up a spelling match between the town people and the school scholars.

—Mrs. O. L. Billings is on the road getting subscribers for a life of James G. Blaine. We understand she is meeting with great success.

—Cyrus Chapman's new residence in North Delano is rapidly drawing towards completion. He intends occupying it about April 1st.

—Eggs are getting cheaper and is predicted that before Easter they will be ten cents a dozen.—Eagle.

And the McKinley bill still in effect.

—Several of our coal burners have used up their winter's supply and have been obliged to fall back on wood as a means of warming their domicils and cooking their meals.

—On Saturday, at 2 o'clock, P. M., at Cramer's Hall, the Democrats of the town of Franklin will hold a caucus for the purpose of nominating a Democratic ticket for chairman and two other supervisors, town clerk, treasurer, and assessor, and to transact other town business.

—J. W. Mounts, one of Rockford's veteran warriors and solid Democrats called in on Saturday. What he can't tell about the ancient and modern history of Democracy in Wright county the bird up street need not try to supply. And the two don't exactly agree every time either.

--On Wednesday the committee of three consisting of Dr. Catlin, Rebecca White and C. W. Ingerson met at the residence of Miss White and drafted a constitution and elected officers for the ensuing year for the Delano Washington's Birthday Association. It is hoped to have as good a time on Feb. 22nd next, as we did this year.

—Delano is beautifully located and if properly drained and cleaned would be even more healthy than now. A Surveyor should be hired for a few days to establish grades, and drains should be made on the principal streets so that cellars and vacant lots would not be obliged to hold stagnant water a good share of the year. And the sidewalks could be more regularly placed so that when a new house is built it could be put where it should be. Some provision for water in case of fires should be made for Third and Fourth streets and other places away from the river.

—The Eagle after abusing and calling Mr. William Ziebarth names, as it has been wont to do for lo these many years takes us to task for allowing that honorable gentleman a few lines of our space in which to make reply, that the public may at least hear his side of the story. The bird up street has become so accustomed to making her almost weekly attacks on some one who has no means, or at least but a poor one of replying that she seems to think every body must sit still and take what she gives them and say nothing. And now that people will take the GAZETTE and some of them do read Mr. Z's replys, and many claim that they are true, and a good deal more could be said it appears to bother her considerably. If she does not desire the GAZETTE to furnish Mr. Z. space for his answers, when he a respectable and responsible citizen who has time and again been honored with offices of trust, notwithstanding the continued attempts of the Eagle to "squelch" him signs his name to his articles, and like a man faces the consequences, the old "ink fish" should cease abusing him or giving space to nameless "Inquirers" to do so. People have for the last 15 years or more read and furnished their children to read these weekly articles, to which replies have seldom been made, concerning some of the best men of our community and even men outside of our county, until people living at a distance have been lead to believe that Delano and even Wright county is a very hard place. Preachers of the Gospel come here and say I know Delano is a very wicked place. Temperance workers refrain from coming here as if they were afraid they would be ill treated, perhaps mobbed. Neighboring towns say to people who contemplate settling in Delano: "Have you read the Eagle?" "If you haven't read it, read it before you go." This tells the story. When good, bad and indifferent citizens are hauled over the coals after the manner of our up town neighbor, who is hatched in the brick house, and twits others of their daring to write in opposition to her because they "teach school in a one story frame" and desire to reply to her insinuations and inuendoes it does seem as if the Eagle ought not to ruffle her feathers and look so ugly about it. Don't do so anymore.

--Notices have been posted by the Village Democratic committee for a caucus to be held in the City Hall, on Monday, March 13, at 8 P. M., to nominate a full village ticket.

—On Saturday, March 4, the flags were raised on the Democratic poles in town in honor of the inauguration of Grover Cleveland to his second term as President of the United States.

—An eminent divine sent to his flock postal cards announcing that he would be on hand to preach at this place. He must have been in a hurry when he wrote them as at least two of them went astray.

—Our neighbor up street keeps seeing visions of "long eared" animals. She appears to be right in among them. Wonder if she thinks because she puts on an "Eagle's feathers" her ears are the less prominent or her bray the less discordant.

--The officers for the ensuing year elected by the committee for the Delano Washington's Birthday Association are:

PRESIDENT, M. A. O'Hair.

VICE PRESIDENTS, C. H. Vorse, John Coolen, Martin Conzet, John H. McGary, John Rader, John Cunningham, W. T. Ziebarth.

SECRETARY, Miss Rebecca White.

TREASURER, George P. Schaffer.

—On January 26 the Eagle came out with an array of figures trying to make people believe that our village council had received a total of $4,062.00, this year and were extravagant. Compare this with the Official Financial Statement of the village which claims the receipts were $3,259.80, a difference of $802.20.

Eagle's Scare Crow Estimates	$4,062 20
Official Financial Statement,	3,259.80
Eagle's Misleading Total,	$802.20

When the bird desires to bulldoze votes this is about as near as she often comes to figuring facts.

As for the expenditures $671.75 went for city hall repairs and improvements. Of course everybody knows the Eagle don't have much time for that structure.

It is a Fact.

The cranks and dead-beats are not the most desirable persons to have for justices of the peace.—Eagle.

She seems to be showing symptoms of a ray of intelligence. To which class does she presume to belong since I. Gutzwiller, Jr., was turned down by such a majority the last time he tried to be elected to that honorable position?

The Eagle has said, and this week repeats the assertion, that "no one should be chosen for a local office who has not a home or some interest in the town." What will she do with her Editor-in-chief when he comes before the mugwump caucus? Where is his home? There are lots of good men who have all they possess here in Delano. And while that may not be so MUCH as some others it is their ALL.

List of Patents

Granted to Minnesota inventors this week. Reported by C. A. Snow & Co. Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, Opp. U. S. Patent Office, Washington, D. C:

C. A. Brost, Lakeville, automatic wagon-brake; J. E. Driscoll, St. Paul, bridle bit; J. Opdale, Duluth, vehicle-wheel.

Personals.

Charles Conzet visited Waverly to'ay on band business.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Davies visited on Wednesday, at Montrose.

Insurance agent A. E. Hitz arrived home this A. M. from the cities.

Mr. and Mrs. Farmer, of Minneapolis, spent Sunday with Mrs. F's parents, here.

Dr. Catlin made a professional call in Carver county, on Thursday, during the storm.

Miss Sadie Van Eman attended the Silver wedding at Greenwood yesterday evening.

Pension-examiner Shrader did not get to the county seat at the last meeting of the board.

On Tuesday Miss Lottie Halgren passed through town on her way to the city for a week's visit.

Mr. Putnam and wife, of Buffalo, visited friends here this week. S. A. made us a pleasant call, this morning.

County Commissioners Mattson and Flanigan and County Attorney Culkin went west on the G. N. last night.

County Culings.

From the Waverly Tribune we learn that a movement is on foot to form a Wright County World's Fair Association, for the purpose of procuring reduced rates, and having a good time at Chicago, and on the road there and back, this summer. This would probably be the cheapest and pleasantest method of attending that place where every body wants to go and the likes of which will not be repeated for several years.

The Wright County Cornet Band association formed at Delano, on Friday, by electing J. J. Nolan, Waverly, President; C. M Conzet, Delano, Vice President; O. L. Billings, Delano, Secretary; William Reich, Albion, treasurer; Prof. R. M. Bohn, Delano, Musical director; Standing committee. D. W. Flannigan, Waverly; August Lorentz, Albion, and J. M. Gott, Delano. The next meeting will be held in Waverly, Friday, March 10, at which time the organization is to be completed and time set for holding Band Tournaments. All Wright county Bands are invited to become members of the association.

Among the answers given at the Teacher's Examination here this week to the question "What Educational Journals do you read?" was one doing us credit. We are proud to know that a young gentleman was honest enough and had the moral courage to give among others the name of his home paper, the "BUFFALO GAZETTE." We are also proud to know that the rising generation recognize the fact that to the local paper belongs a part of the honor of directing their course of study of inspiring them to greater efforts in the pursuit of knowledge. How pure and clean the reading furnished these coming men and women should be is hereby plainly shown.

Rockford-Delano Spelling Contest.

On Friday afternoon the scholars of the two upper rooms of the Delano School drove to Rockford, where they were entertained in good shape by the Rockford school, a splendid supper being served. At about 8 P. M. they prepared to decide who were the best spellers by having the third and last contest of the series of three; each school having defeated the other once. Prof. Dewey and C. J. Buckley looked after the interests of the Delano school while Mrs. Beede and F. H. Johnson looked after the interests of the Rockford school. Prof. Beede was umpire, and Superintendent Lindsley pronounced the words from a spelling book. The first contest of the evening resulted in a victory for Delano. The second went to Rockford. Then came the exciting time as the pupils took their places about 40 strong on each side for the "spell down" that would decide what had been so evenly and stubbornly fought. At the early hour of about 2 A. M., on Saturday morning, with the G. A. R. hall still packed with spectators the contest ended by Rockford gaining the victory. Those of both schools who remained up the longest were to decide by a contest, among themselves who should have the prizes offered. The spelling match has resulted in stimulating the scholars in both schools and many words are now spelled correctly that heretofore were spelled wrong.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

SONNET BY HATEM TAI.

(Voice of Masonry and Family Magazine.)

How frail are riches and their joys!
Morn builds the heap which eve destroys;
Yet can they leave one sure delight—
The thought that we've employed them right.

What bliss can wealth afford to me
When life's last solemn hour I see,
When MAVIA'S sympathizing sighs
Will but augument my agonies?

Can hoarded gold dispel the gloom
That death must shed around the tomb?
Or cheer the ghost that hovers there,
And fills with shrieks the desert air?

What boots it: MAVIA, in the grave,
Whether I lov'd to waste or save?
The hands that millions now can grasp,
In death no more than mine shall clasp.

Were I ambitious to behold
Increasing stores of treasur'd gold,
Each tribe that roves the desert knows
I might be wealthy if I chose;

But other joys can gold impart,
Far other wishes warm my heart—
Ne'er shall I strive to swell the heap,
Till Want and Woe have ceased to weep.

With brow unalter'd I can see
The hour of wealth or poverty;
I've drank from both the cups of fate,
Nor this could sink, nor that elate.

With fortune blest, I ne'er was found
To look with scorn on those around:
Nor for the loss of paltry ore
Shall HATEM seem to HATEM poor.

B. FAY MILLS, the noted reylyalist, is holding a series of meetings in Minneapolis. The field is large and it is hoped that much good may be accomplished.

THE name of Lewis Baker has been proposed as Minister to Brazil, Japan, or some similar mission. People who read his paper, the St. Paul Globe, know that he is competent, and that he deserves, as much as any man in the state to be honored for his effective work

Tariff Pictures.

Reciprocity increased the value of the Cuban market for American breadstuffs during the past year from $812,642

to

$3,538,525

Our farmers were the principal beneficiaries of this increase.—N. Y. Press.

People in this section of country attribute the sale of more grain to the fact that Providence provided them large crops for several years, and they have more than they can use or sell at home, consequently, notwithstanding the 25 cts per bushel tariff of the McKinley bill, the price has come down, so that people from other countries can buy to better advantage here than elsewhere. Most Minnesota farmers have a few bushels surplus on hand now, that they would be glad to sell at prices which they could have gotten before the additional 5 cts per bushel tariff of the McKinley bill was established, as a sop to them, to procure their votes and not to raise the price of the cereal. Supply and demand governs the prices and all the tariff that can be placed on wheat don't help our markets when we wish to sell to Cuba, or any other place. If our crop should be devoured by the grasshoppers or from any cause prove a failure, so that instead of having wheat to sell we should be obliged to buy from Canada, then we would feel the effects of the tariff. Every time we purchased a bushel of wheat to feed our hungry families we would pay 25 cts into the treasury of the the U. S., mostly to be used in building expensive post offices, custom houses and other fine structures in or adjacent to some speculators' property in some city where votes might be influenced at the next election. As far Reciprocity opening the door for this market, if it is a fact let us have a chance to trade with every country. Let us send our golden grain to the hungry of every land, and in return receive the products of their lands, and labor, many of which we must procure from foreign lands or do without, and others of which we can get to better advantage in exchange for our surplus than otherwise.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 10, 1893.

President Cleveland has not changed his habits since he was in the White House before. Every morning this week he has been at his desk hard at work by 7 o'clock, and midnight has found him still at that desk nearly every night. It is very well that he has such industrious habits, as up to the present time he has been given but little time to work between the hours of 10 a. m. and 6 p. m., owing to his numerous callers.

The semi-official announcement that President Cleveland would not remove until the end of their terms, except for causes other than political, any of what are known as four-year officials—that is, officials commissioned for a term of four years, resulted in lessening in a small degree the pressure for office, but there is still enough, and to spare as may be seen and heard on all sides.

Speaking of office-seekers, the number of them now in Washington has been greatly exaggerated by the newspapers. I have no means of knowing—it is more than doubtful whether anyone has—whether the statement repeatedly made that there are more applications for office than ever before it is true or not, but I do know, as do the Washington hotel keepers to their sorrow, that the number of men seeking offices in person is today much smaller than it was months after the inauguration of Harrison. It is probably true that many of the thousands of democrats who came to the inauguration and remained until the first of this week were office-seekers, but if so they filed their papers and went back home after paying their respects to the President and his cabinet, and our hotels are not much more crowded at this time than is usual at this season. And at none of them can be found the seething, loud-talking crowds which were their most prominent features until midsummer following Harrison's inauguration. It is just as well to tell the truth about these things. There are democrats here after the offices which they believe their work in the campaign entitles them to—unfortunately more of them than there are offices to be filled—but there is no such crowding and wild scrambling as has been represented.

Senators Gorman, Blackburn, Ransom, Cockrell, Harris, Brice and White of Louisiana, were appointed a committee by the democratic caucus held on Tuesday to arrange the reorganization of the Senate on a democratic basis. Owing to the difficulty attending the allotting of the various chairmanships of committees the committee has not yet completed its work, which will have to be ratified by another caucus before being brought up in open Senate.

There has been lots of tom-fool talk because the Populist Senators, Peffer, Kyle, and Allen were not invited to attend the democratic caucus, while Martin, of Kansas, was. There was nothing strange or unusual about it, Martin is a democrat, although he affiliates, to a certain extent, with the populists, while neither of the other three make any claim to being democrats.

It is more than probable that President Cleveland and his cabinet are giving more attention to the critical financial condition of the country than they are to making appointments to office. The offices can wait, but the continued demand upon the Treasury for gold must be met or the country be plunged into a panic, the results and end of which no man can predict. Secretary Carlisle is confident of being able to meet all demands for gold, but is not yet prepared to make his plans public. The prevalent opinion seems to be that an issue of bonds will have to be made.

The report of the House Ways and Means committee on the probable condition of the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year beginning the first of next July, was not completed until this week. The democrats on the committee reject the figures in ex-Secretary Foster's report which estimate a very small surplus at that time, and state their belief that there will be a deficiency amounting to from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000, giving in detail their reasons therefor. The republicans on the committee, or rather who were on that committee, for the committee expired with the Fifty-second Congress, in a minority report, stand by Mr. Foster's figures.

Mrs. Cleveland is more popular than ever before, and about the first question the stranger asks is how he or she can see the President's wife. She has held no public receptions yet, but there is no trouble in seeing her.

Rumors are plenty, but there are no facts about President's intentions concerning the treaty for the annexation of Hawaii. Princess Kaulani, heiress to a throne that does not exist, turned up in Washington this week, but why or wherefor is not apparent.

The batch of nominations sent to the Senate yesterday by President Cleveland contained the names of several democratic wheel horses, and, judging by the talk around the capitol and hotels, the appointments give general satisfaction and will all be promptly confirmed by the Senate.

President Cleveland and Vice President Stevenson have accepted invitations to attend the opening of the World's Fair.

"Shall We Have Prohibition?"

[Essay, written for the Delano Public School.]

This is a question that has been discussed and debated by some of our wisest men; the last debate that we have on record took place between the students of the Delano High School and it was decided in the negative by three competent judges. Of course I was on the negative side of the question. I will now try to present this question in the form of an essay, as best I can.

In the first place, the first law that was ever made was a prohibitory law, and this law, as we all know, was violated by our foreparents; how can it be expected that people of this age should obey a prohibitory law instituted by mortal man when our foreparents would disobey a law laid down by the Divine Power?

Therefore I believe that it is contrary to human nature to obey a prohibitory law Then again, there can be no law enforced by any country preventing a person from eating and drinking what he or she desires to eat or drink. This is what a prohibitory law would do directly; thereof I believe a prohibitory law would inpinge on the rights of the people and be contrary to the constitution of the U. S. or, in other words unconstitutional.

What is the prohibition party composed of? Is it composed of the country's most eminent statesmen? Is it composed of men who have done anything for the upbuilding of our most glorious country. Nay to the contrary it is composed of disappointed office seekers and political cranks. Is this the party for the people? I believe not.

Then again the wisest and most eminent statesmen from the time of Washington to the present day, believed not in prohibition, but in high license and in enforcing laws, regulating the sale of liquor as the only method of cheeking the sale of intoxicating liquors.

The judgment and opinion of these if the one worth anything (which they surely are) should be a lesson to us and should shape our views.

The prohibition party never have made a law in any state that ever prohibited the sale of liquor one moment. The father of the "Maine Law" which we believe was the foundation of the prohibition party said only recently that prohibition would not do and advised the state of Maine to make new laws in regard to the liquor traffic, he recognized that licensing was the only method of regulating the liquor traffic. I have been told that the Maine law was tried in the state of Ohio in 1856. The saloons were all closed one day but the next morning a person every little while would run across a store the windows of which were filled with bottles, labelled, "Bear's Oil," of course we all know what these bottles contained; this is prohibition. Prohibition is a failure even in our little local option towns, the topers get their bitters whenever they want them. Where does it come from? Of course from the innocent temperance saloon or a blind pig located where the low class of people are sure to find them. Which is more honorable, for a man to keep a saloon on the sly as under prohibition, or for a man to run the business in an open manner by paying a license? I believe the latter to be the more honorable for both the buyer and the seller of liquor.

Then I believe the taste and desire for intoxicating liquors to be natural, for I heard read accounts of men traveling in savage countries, who have found that the natives use intoxicating drinks more powerful than the drinks of civilized countries, (these drinks being of their own manufacture.) Therefore I believe the desire for stimulants of this kind for some people to be a natural desire, and can not be shaken off, that if it were possible to enforce prohibition every person that desired liquor would be manufacturing his own beverage and thus in time we would drift back to the present system, or something worse.

There are two more important parts to the prohibition platform to be considered. They, in the first place believe that the government could own and controll all the telegraph systems and railroads of the U. S. This is absurd because the government would have too much work to do and the public money would not be used as carefully as it is now.

In the second place they believe that the women should be allowed their franchise we are all aware, that is all intelligent people are aware that it is not the woman's place to meddle with politics her place I believe is at home. If women were allowed their franchise I think home would cease to be a pleasure and a joy to them; instead of being at home they would be, to speak broadly, loafing about corner stores, saloons, etc., etc. They would cease to be respected as they are respected at present. A woman may have brains to become a good politican but if she has, she had better use her good judgment and understanding in her household affairs.

I don't mean by these facts and ideas that I have jotted down that intemperance is the proper thing, but to the contrary I believe it is the most abominable musiance that we have to contend with, but I also think that it is impossible to prohibit the use of the poison. E. A. FREEMAN.

CORRESPONDENCE

Hennepin County Schools.

Miss Rhoda Pierce has been re-engaged to teach the spring term in Dist. 104.

Mrs. A. S. Beede promises to give a free lecture, some time in April, for the benefit of the Maple Plain school library.

Prof. Lynch has resigned his position as principal of the Osseo school.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewcock, of Plymouth, uncle and aunt of Bayard T. Shaver, signed the petition requesting the commissioners to adhere to their former action and not confirm their misguided nephew. They think it would be better for him to take off his coat and go to work and earn his living in an independent way on a farm. But he considers it a mortal insult when any one suggests manual labor for him. Commissioner Egan's letter in the Times, of the 10th inst., stating that Shaver's real merits only entitled him to a second grade certificate, offended him greatly; but it was the truth, and it is the truth that hurts the worst sometimes. The commissioners are all intelligent men and it is folly for Mr. Shaver to pose before them as a man of broad caliber when he is not. There is need now for a superior man in the office of assistant superintendent. Prof. J. T. Pribble is such a man, and Shaver should follow the advice of his real friends and step aside. He should go out on a farm at once and make a good home. He is a big stout fellow, raised on a farm, and would make a good farmer, if he could muster up moral courage enough to shake off his laziness and lay aside his false pride. Friends would rally around him then who could never approve of his hanging after an office for which he is in no wise fitted either by nature or education to fill. He is begging pitifully now for the commissioners to confirm him, and his friends are disgusted beyond measure at his unmanly course. But he is bull-headed, and turns a deaf ear to all really good advice on the subject and persists in his undignified course. Those who are encouraging him in this business would be ashamed to see their own brother following his example, and they are not his best friends.

LONG LAKE.

Peter Miller, of Medina, was in our village a few days ago.

James Mooney, one of the pioneers of Medina, died about the 1st of March.

The lyceum at the White school house continues to be well attended. It has become an interesting institution, and it never fails in being attractive to its audience. Speaking of lyceums and the death of the venerable E. F. Hainlin formerly of the vicinity of Watertown, recalls incidents of the early days of this community of which Mr. Hainlin was a settler before going to Watertown. Lyceums began to exist at an early day in this locality and as early as 1856-7 public questions as the slavery women's rights temperance, theological educational and other questions were discussed in which Mr. Hainlin, the Graves, the Stubbs and French families, Gibson, Teas, Archibald, Lydard and others took an active part. Ernest Hainlin, deceased, an attorney of Watertown, was a son of E. F. Hainlin.

Mrs. Braden received the appointment as postmaster from the Harrison administration during the last few days of its extence to succeed J. B Kingsley resigned. A petition signed by a considerable number of citizens of this community, has been presented for the appointment of B. F. Christlieb as postmaster under the Cleveland Administration.

The Board of Commissioners of Hennepin Co., passed through this place, last week, on county business. They examined some work now in progress on the new road running from Delano through this place to Minneapolis. This road when completed will be a great convenience to western Hennepin and Wright counties.

The following officers were elected yesterday at the Orono Town meeting which was held in the Long Lake hall, viz:

Supervisors, D. A. Lydiard, Chairman; Milo Stubbs, and Carl Ekstrom; town clerk, A. C. Bailey; treasurer, Frank Smith; assessor, George Maxwell; justice, J. E. Stangland; constable, Henry Maxwell.

GEOLOGISTS consider kerosene to be an animal oil. Hence what we burn in lamps is the remains of long extinct monsters of the earth.

NORTH CAROLINA is building a railroad with a twenty-four-inch gauge. In watering the stock they are obliged to use a teakettle with a small spout.

A MAINE man will send to the Columbian exposition a fir spar sixty feet in length and without a bend or crook in it. It would make a fir straight flagstaff.

THREE brothers named Carr were married by a fourth brother, who is a clergyman in Newark, N. J. The car-coupler act is working with marked success.

PRINCESS MARGARET of Prussia received from her godmother, the queen of Italy, as a wedding gift a tiara of diamonds said to be worth not less than $50,000. Tiara-boom-de-ay.

THE New York is now an American ship and belongs to an American line. The Paris will soon follow and in her wake will come a long line of vessels owning allegiance to "Old Glory."

NINETY firms of leather manufacturers, representing $45,000,000 capital, are said to have combined to put up sole leather, which is usually put under. It will be noticed that the syndicate is well heeled.

AT Vienna 15,000 men, young and middle-aged, have formed a bachelors' club and have vowed never to get married. A young man who is fool enough to join such a club will at least not endanger the happiness of some good woman.

It is a fact, perhaps not generally known, that the president of the United States is never given a certificate, commission or even official notification of his election. He would never find it out unless he read the newspapers or somebody told him.

AN Alabama church is in commotion because at a hugging bee to raise funds to pay off the mortgage a farmer, after paying a quarter, was blindfolded and allowed to hug his own wife twenty minutes. He has sued the trustees for fraud and she has gone to live with her mother.

TWO CASES are now in the courts for damages for being "shut up in patent folding beds," one in Portland, Ore., and one in Wood, Tex., where a lady demands $5,000 from the man who sold her the bed. There are plenty of folding beds that don't play such tricks—why buy one that does?

THE cities of New York, Philadelphia and Boston have been connected by telephone for several years. Chicago and New York have been connected since October. And now the long distance system takes in New York and New England in the east, Milwaukee, Chicago and Detroit in the west, and all prominent intervening points.

THE first train over the Columbian exposition grounds on opening day will be drawn by an engine run by Miss Ida Hewitt, locomotive engineer on a branch of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad in West Virginia, and the only woman railway engineer in the world. She will wear for that trip the costume of a Spanish girl of the fourteenth century, and will manage the train with a grace no clumsy man can ever hope to rival.

PROF. H. A. HAZEN, of the United States weather bureau, sums up an entertaining article in the Engineering Magazine by saying that after weighing all the evidence we must conclude that there has been no appreciable change in our climate in historic times. If this is the case the "real old-fashioned winter" of story was a "corker" only because our grandfathers had less comfortable homes in which to meet its terrors or because our grandfathers like to tell a good story.

AS THE mountain wouldn't go to Mahommed, Mahommed went to the mountain. So the prophet's follower, Mahommed Webb, an American convert to Islamism, finding he couldn't convert this country at long range, has come from India to do mission work in New York city. But the religion will never be popular in the United States. A good Moslem must have four wives. At the present rates charged by dressmakers and milliners one is all the average American cares to pay bills for.

LEE MANTLE, who has been appointed by the governor, ad interim, United States senator from Montana, the legislature having failed to elect, is scarcely of middle age, but has had an eventful life. Left an orphan in his childhood in Utah, he learned telegraphy, subsequently engaged in the stage coach business and at last took up his residence in Butte, of which city he was recently chosen mayor. He was twice a member of the Montana territorial legislature, and in the last term of that body was speaker of the house of representatives. He is wealthy and a bachelor.

MRS. FRENCH SHELDON, the African traveler, advises any of her sex who contemplate a similar excursion to the Dark Continent to overcome her natural fear of cows. "I was in a land," she says, "where women sold for five beads, cows for ten; notwithstanding this, presents of cows were made to me all along my route—to me, who can hardly restrain a shriek when I see one of the animals! I had to conceal my fear, for not only would my hosts have been angry, but my own men would have been willing to tear me to pieces. A woman will know what I suffered to preserve a calm demeanor."

A WELL-KNOWN man writer who describes woman as a study in "tears and talons" and a most "cleverly cruel animal," chivalrously lays the blame upon man's shoulders. "Among women," he says, "centuries of seeing man's selection pass them by for some more favored maiden has implanted a peculiar spite. From unremembered times the fortunate have not forborne from casting back on their unsuccessful sisters the eyes of triumph and the chuckle of contempt. Ages of this founded a fresh cruelty, and there was gradually arrayed, both against man and woman, the hatred of the unasked."

Representative Dunn has sent the following relating to election of state senators and representatives:

The senators shall be chosen by single districts of contiguous territory at the same time that the members of the house of representatives are required to be chosen, and in the same manner, and no representative district shall shall be divided in the formation of a senate district. The senate districts shall be numbered in a regular series. There shall be an entire new election of all of the senators and representatives in the year 1896. Representatives chosen at such election, or at any election thereafter, shall hold their office for the term of two years, and the senators chosen at such election by districts designated by odd numbers shall go out of office at the expiration of the second year, and senators chosen by districts designated by the even numbers shall go out of office at the expiration of the fourth year, and thereafter senators shall be chosen for four years, unless elected to fill a vacancy, except that there shall be an entire new election of all the senators at the election next preceding the year in which an enumeration of the inhabitants of this state is taken under the laws thereof in pursuance of section 23, article 4, of this constitution. And the senators chosen at such new election by districts designated by odd numbers shall go out of office at the expiration of the second year, and the senators chosen by districts designated by even numbers shall go out of office at the expiration of the fourth year. The bill was referred to the committee on judiciary.

The committee on railroads recommended the indefinite postponement of the bill for an addition to the constitution of the state making the office of the railroad and warehouse commissioners elective. The report was adopted.

By resolution of Senator Craven, the superintendent of public instruction was asked to inform the senate how much money would have to be raised by taxation in case a free text book bill passed.

There has been a misapprehension regarding the Mille Lacs dam, the bill which passed the house. The bill so far from being a lumbermen's scheme has been made necessary by the acts of the lumbermen themselves in the past in having dredged the lake outlet so as to lower the lake several feet, to the damage of farms on the shores. The farmers interested, if the bill is not passed, will be forced to fill the outlet with rock and timber, which will cost the state to remedy. The bill calls for but $1,000 aid, the balance of will have to be borne by Mille Lacs county.

Gov. Nelson returned to the senate S. F. 110, providing for the publication and distribution of the the legislative manual, without his approval. He objected to the number provided for and also the distribution. The senate was in favor of the bill and the question of passing it over the veto received 30 votes to but 14 for sustaining the governor. It takes 36 votes to pass a vetoed bill, and the bill fails. The committee on printing was then instructed to bring in a bill which would meet the objections urged by the governor in his message announcing the veto

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Doings of the State Law Makers at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, March 8.—In the senate a joint resolution referring to railroad rates was read the second time and placed on the calendar. Senator March introduced a bill to amend the law to punish drunkenness. After considerable discussion the grain and warehouse committee was authorized to employ a clerk. Lammers's resolution relating to the improvement of closed waterways of the Red river was passed.

There was only one bill on the house third reading calendar and the farmers were particularly intcrested in it, so the bill was taken up and passed. It is Maguire's bill to compel railroads to construct side tracks and switches to elevators built on switches or within 200 feet therefrom.

The senate went into committee of the whole and resumed the consideration of Day's game and fish bill, where they left off yesterday.

In the house an unusually large number of petitions and remonstrances were presented and referred. Among the latter were several against the pending new capitol bill; also an increased number against any religious legislation. The committee made two reports on Winston's election bill. After considerable discussion the majority report was adopted. New bills were introduced as follows: Relating to dams and mills; boards of county commissioners and printing contracts; fixing the price of handling railroad ties and cedar poles in booms; for care of free text books; limiting the service of sheriff to two two-year terms; relating to marriage; relating to incest.

The eight-hour bill was brought up again, only to be defeated.

ST. PAUL, March 9.—In the senate bills were introduced: Amending the law of municipal corporations; fixing the bonds of state treasurer at $1,000,000 and making his salary $5,000, and amending the law relating to security for costs. The balance of the day was spent in committee of the whole. The bills relating to good roads was the bone of contention. There were two bills on the subject, but no decision reached.

The house had a busy day. Bills were introduced: Relating to fees of clerks of district courts; improving frogs and switches on railroads, and a bill for the election of senators and representatives. The following bills were passed: Construction of side tracks and switches; control of non-navigable streams by county commissioners; relating to soldiers' home; to cure irregularities of private corporations; reassessment of local improvements; forfeiture of the Hastings & Dakota land grant; regulating weights and measures; timber protection in state parks. When the bill providing for free text books was reached, Mr. Winston demanded a call of the house and maintained it until 94 members were present in their seats. As the vote proceeded, Mr. Gorman and Mr. Linnemann of Stearns explained their negative votes, Mr. Gorman on the ground that the bill was not optional as applied to cities; Mr. Linneman, that his constituents did not want it. The bill was passed, 77 to 11.

ST. PAUL, March 10.—The senate met at 10 a. m. The order of petitions was burdened with a score of prayers from constituents, all of which covered old ground. Three were in favor of the Markham bill and a half dozen for municipal suffrage for women.

Senator Craven offered a resolution requesting the superintendent of public instruction to report to the senate an estimate of the cost to the state of furnishing free school text books. Adopted.

Senator Tawney offered a resolution ordering the printing of so much of the municipal charter bill as is now proposed by the charter commission.

Two bills were introduced. One relating to fees of clerk of district court, and the other providing for a revision of municipal laws.

Senator March's bill instructing railroad commissioners to revise freight tariffs was passed.

In the house the following bills were introduced: Relating to partition fences; to license the sale of cigars and cigarettes; relating to expenses of probate judge; relating to fees of state treasurer; Minnesota hospital of insane. It confines the location at Rochester and Fergus Falls.

The bill relating to defective execution of deeds was passed.

In committee of the whole, among important bills recommended for passage was the Markham bill, to provide a general law under which the counties outside of the large cities may issue bonds for the erection of public buildings. The northern counties of Aitkin, Wadena, Hubbard and Itasca will be particularly interested. Itasca county is on the eve of erecting a full set of new buildings at Grand Rapids. Park Rapids wants some new buildings and also Wadena.

ST. PAUL, March 11.—There was barely a quorum present today in the senate and the business transacted was mainly unimportant routine. In committee of the whole half a dozen bills were recommended to pass. Nearly an hour was spent discussing Rogers' bill fixing a legal classification for boilers.

Senator Dean and Senator McMillan reached an agreement on their election bills. Each had two measures—one prohibiting corrupt practice and the other regulating primaries. Each recognized that a contest would endanger both measures, and accordingly they made a compromise whereby McMillan withdraws his corrupt practice bill and Dean his primary election bill—the two to unite their forces in the other two bills.

The house had hard work to get a quorum. At no time during the day was the number sufficient to attend to the calendar. The following bills were introduced: For the consideration and revision of the laws of the state; management of county jails; to regulate the appointment of state officers; register of deeds to require taxes to be paid before transfer is recorded; relating to heirship of real estate; relating to intoxicating liquors. It requires, in villages of 1,000 population and less, that one-half the fee be deposited in advance of time of application.

ST. PAUL, March 13.—The legislature was badly crippled by non-attendance this morning, the senate for a while not having a quorum, and the house having a number barely sufficient to transact business. In the senate one new bill was introduced, to regulate itinerant venders of goods, and no new bills in the house. Both houses went into committee of the whole, but made little progress. The house committee, however, acted on two important bills, the Jacobson grain and warehouse bill and the Welsh automatic brake bill, recommending both for passage. The former was without debate, but there was an extended discussion of the latter, which, as agreed to and as it will now pass the house, requires all cars in the state to be so equipped by 1896.

The house spent the entire afternoon session in committee of the whole, and although the attendance was still light, yet made considerable progress. Among important bills recommended to pass were two to provide for taxation of sleeping car companies, and a general bill to provide for the issuing of bonds by cities. Mr. Fletcher, of Hennepin, suffered a second and final defeat for his bill to extend the territory in which Minnesota savings banks may operate. One of the pending baking powder bills was also killed, that introduced by Comstock.

In the senate the attendance was also light, and the work was mainly in committee of the whole. The most important action was the defeat of the reformatory bill, from Gov. Nelson, to provide for applying the parole system to the state prison.

The senate finance committee made an important report, recommending both the university tax levy bills and the capitol commission's bill appropriating $3,000,000 for a new capitol to pass.

Col. Hans Mattson.

Col. Hans Mattson died in Minneapolis, March 5. He was born in Onestad, Sweden, Dec. 23, 1832. He received his primary education in Christianstad, and at the age of 17 entered the army of his country. Two years later he emigrated to the United States, arriving in June, 1851.

Col. Mattson took an active part in the republican campaign of 1876 and was chosen a presidential elector. Soon after the close of the campaign he commenced the publication of the Staats Tidning and continued as its chief editor until 1881.

Col. Mattson was married in 1855 to Cherstin Peerson, of Goodhue county, who survives him. She was with him for a time in the course of the war and became an excellent horsewoman. One daughter, Mrs. Luth Jaeger, is living, and four sons, Edgar L., a teller in the Swedish-American bank, W. H., and Theo in California, and a youth in the high school. The colonel wrote "The Story of an Emigrant," an autobiography.

Killed by the Cars.

Timothy Ryan, a car repairer in the "Soo" yards, at St. Paul, met with a horrible death. He was engaged at the end of a car when an engine backed up to couple on, and the man was caught between the draw bars. He was fearfully crushed, the draw bars crushing their way almost completely through the body. When released from his position, Ryan was still alive, but before the patrol wagon could reach the scene he died.

Sunday Prize Fight.

A prize fight was a Sunday morning event at the Half-way House near Sauk River Junction, outside the city limits of St. Cloud, between Joe Kowalakoski, a cigar maker, and John Langes, a saloon keeper. The affair was kept very secret. As near as can be learned, Kowalakoski was knocked out in seven rounds, and it took the services of a physician to restore him to consciousness.

Expenses of the State.

The following items of expense for maintaining the state institutions during the month ending Jan. 31, 1893, were reported to the state auditor:

Geological survey	$2,330.1
Minnesota State Reform school	3,322.14
Building expenses reform school	1,714.58
Current expenses Asylum for the Insane at St. Peter	14,436.16
Current expenses for Asylum for Insane at Rochester	11,915.27

How Was He Hurt?

A man named Martin Hanson, who is employed at a milk farm in Winona, was found unconscious in the barn, with an ugly wound across the lower part of his forehead and face. He remained delirious for about 12 hours. Some believe the wound was caused by the kick of a cow or horse, but many believe it is the work of an enemy, about whom the injured man muttered something while in his delirium. Hanson has no recollection of any of the circumstances save that he was not in the barn when it happened. The case will be investigated.

Horrible Death.

Sudden and fearful was the death of George Grant, engineer of the Schurmeier Wagon company, on Rosabel St., St. Paul. Grant was oiling the machinery and in some way got caught in the fly wheel. Death was practically instantaneous, as when released both arms and legs were broken and the skull had sustained a fearful fracture. Grant has been an employe of the Schurmeier company for several years and has a wife and two children. He was about 36 years old and had a host of friends.

PUFFS FROM THE ENGINE.

THE European locomotives have no headlights.

TWELVE leading locomotive works in this country built 1,703 locomotives in 1892, against 1,963 in 1891. Forty-eight of the principal car factories turned out 93,393 freight cars last year. Eighteen hundred and ninety was the year of maximum production so far.

A FREIGHT train in the arctic regions is a striking invention of Lieut. Peary's brain. This well-known traveler believes that an itinerary of a journey upon the inland ice of Greenland may be followed with precision and that rails for freight trains may be laid.

WITHIN a six-mile radius of Charing Cross, London, there are 270 miles of railway and 255 stations, and within a twelve-mile radius over 400 miles of line and 301 stations. The average number of passengers carried on a week-day by the public conveyances of London, including omnibuses, is 2,500,000. The total for last year was 777,000,000.

Unfermented Bread.

The question has often been brought forward as to the wholesomeness of bread made by the old-fashioned method of raising with yeast, which, as is well known, causes a fermentation, and which is actually a rotting of parts of the flour, and is thought by physicians to be directly responsible for much of the dyspepsia of the present day.

It is claimed by those who have tried it that the Royal Baking Powder will make bread of superior lightness, firmness, and general excellence without the use of yeast. This process entirely does away with the fermentative action, and it is averred that no bread can possibly be so healthful or palatable as that made in this way. It is stated in the receipt that the bread made by this process may be eaten warm and fresh without discomfort.

This is unquestionably a progressive age, and if our scientists can give us hot bread palatable and wholesome, verily we have much to be thankful for.

THE FARMER.

The farmer is a royal man,
A lord, a king;
He reigns on God's primeval plan—
Of him I sing.

Responsive to his daily care,
Earth yields her trust;
He sows, he plants and harvests fair
Spring from the dust.

Delicious fruits a countless store,
From earth's green breast,
Around us their rich fragrance pour,
And make us blest.

The farmer wields a scepter grand,
And Wall street kings
Pay deference to his toiling hand,
That treasure brings.

The monarch of the railroad guild
Must bend the knee;
The farmer feeds him and he's filled—
Withholds—where's he?

Industrious prince! still loyal be,
Though hands are brown,
Thy finished work will win for thee
A laurel crown.

SPIRITED AWAY.

The Exciting Adventure of a Western Lover.

The inhabitants of Albuquerque, N. M., had become greatly excited on account of a series of daring robberies that had been perpetrated in their midst.

Alarming as was the continuation of the robberies, it was surpassed by an occurrence that proved to be the culmination of the work of the desperadoes.

One night the beautiful daughter of Col. Bleeker, the richest eitizen of the city, was kidnaped. That the deed had been done by the robbers for the purpose of keeping the maiden captive until they could obtain a liberal ransom from the distracted father there could scarcely be a doubt.

Helen had a lover named Malcolm MacDonald, a shrewd young lawyer, who was confident that the headquarters of the kidnapers were in the crater of lava beds about twenty miles southwest of Albuquerque.

MacDonald knew what he was about when he resolved to attempt the rescue of the dear girl to whom he was betrothed by organizing a party to search for her captors among the lava beds.

Five of his friends, all of them stouthearted and adventurous young fellows, agreed to aid him. Armed to the teeth and mounted on good horses the party quietly left Albuquerque three hours after the abduction of Helen became known.

The lava beds were several acres in extent and were in the shape of a low and broken cone, the top of which was hollowed out so as to resemble a huge bowl. The latter was all that remained of the crater of an extinct volcano.

The young men, holding their rifles in readiness in case of an attack, descended into the great bowl and advanced until they came to the mouth of the cave. The opening was large enough, and from it a good-sized passage wound downward a distance of ten feet to the cave, which was about a rod long and shaped like a right-angled triangle.

The adventurers satisfied themselves by a cautious exploration that the robbers were not in the cavity. A little later, while, torch in hand, they were examining the bottom of the hollow, they discovered a square section of the lava floor which was slightly separated from the surrounding lava.

The excited men pounded on the slab of lava until they broke it sufficiently to enable them to grasp the pieces and remove them. A deep hole was revealed, except where narrow shelves, extending on four sides, had served to support the edges of the block.

MacDonald determined to make the descent of the shelving sides of the hole. He argued that the robbers were undoubtedly asleep at that hour, and that the chance of coming upon them before reaching the main cave was small.

Seeing that they could not dissuade him, and admiring his boldness, the young men discontinued their objection; and after they had assured him that they would defend him should he come forth pursued, and would revenge his death should he be killed, they bade him godspeed as he entered the cavity.

He was armed with a long hunting-knife and a brace of pistols, and carried in his hand a dark lantern. Closing the slide of the lantern so as to conceal the light, he crept in darkness down the passage.

The sound of washing waters came to his startled ears, and he inferred that he stood upon the edge of a subterranean lake. After considerable hesitation he ventured to turn on the light.

Soon MacDonald's attention was arrested by a singular sight. A huge mass appeared from the gloom beyond the reach of the lantern's rays and slowly advanced toward him.

It was not a craft belonging to the robbers, as MacDonald had at first feared, but was an island of lava. That so great a mass of lava could float seemed incredible, until MacDonald bethought that the mass was undoubtedly composed of pumice, lighter than water.

It immediately occurred to our hero that the robbers were probably on the lava vessel, and he closed the lantern without delay.

As the island came nearer he could discern a dim light. He at once came to the conclusion that the mass was of considerable size and that the light arose near its center from a campfire, around which the outlaws were probably gathered. When the island had almost reached the shore it caused a slight swashing of the water and guided by the sound MacDonald could almost tell where the floating lava was. Cautiously putting out his hands he felt them come in contact with a hard and moving substance; and as the island touched the shore he gave a leap of sufficient power to carry him well upon the singular craft.

He sat still for a few moments, and to his alarm noticed that the island had not lingered at the shore, as he had hoped that it would do.

It was already moving steadily away, and he surmised that the currents of the singular lake, or river, so ran as to carry the mass round and round the cave.

After slowly climbing upward for six or seven feet MacDonald came to the top of the island, and then learned that his theory as to the dim illumination was correct. The island was circular, about half an acre in extent, and near its center was the fire, now burning low.

The island shelved from its elevated sides toward the center, and on account of the bowl-like surface it was impossible to see the entire area, although the edges could not be distinctly seen on account of the inability of the fire, except in its immediate vicinity, to overcome the power of the darkness.

Rolled in blankets and stretched around the fire were eight robbers. About ten feet from the fire was a wigwam covered with strips of straw matting that had been laid upon the slanting poles of the frame. That his dear Helen was in this wigwam MacDonald felt almost certain.

How to act under the circumstances was most perplexing. To attempt to rescue Helen, or even to communicate with her, would be an undertaking fraught with the greatest hazard.

While our hero hesitated his eyes were attracted to some plunder that the robbers had left in a pile a short distance from where he stood.

Among the articles were heavy horse blankets. A bright idea came to MacDonald. He removed his shoes, went in his stocking feet to the pile, selected two blankets and approached the fire and the eight men, who slept soundly after the arduous work of the previous night.

MacDonald did not, however, spend any time in thinking of the singularity and peril of his situation. In the most careful manner he proceeded to cover the burning sticks with the blankets and to smother the fire.

Once more the cave was wrapped in inky blackness. MacDonald moved the slide of his lantern sufficiently to give him the little light that he needed.

He approached the wigwam with a beating heart.

Yes, Helen was there!

She recognized him and did not scream.

At this moment one of the villains awoke.

"What is the matter with the fire?" he cried.

MacDonald had taken the precaution to close his lantern while Helen and he were whispering, so that there was no danger of immediate discovery.

The man got up and began to fumble around. His companions awoke, and swore because they had been disturbed.

The situation was desperate, well-nigh hopeless. MacDonald feared that he had played a brave and most perilous part only to be defeated.

While he was in terrible suspense, not knowing what was best to do, the girl whispered to him:

"Let us fly. There is a boat. I came in it; there is a stake with a red flag on it that will guide me to it."

Meanwhile the robbers had discovered the blankets and were removing them from the fire. Two of the fellows approached the wigwam.

As they reached it MacDonald and Helen left it, after he had hastily cut the cords that bound the maiden's hands behind her back.

The robbers were now thoroughly aroused, but they could not readily find a lantern and could not tell where the fugitives, running noiselessly in their stocking feet, were.

MacDonald opened the slide of the lantern as soon as he dared to do it. They had reached the top of the height just above the shore, but no flag was in sight.

The robbers saw the fugitives, yelled viciously and fired their pistols. Bullets whistled alarmingly near the intended victims.

MacDonald closed the lantern, and holding Helen's hand walked along the island's edge. Again he allowed a gleam of light to escape. He saw the flag ten feet from him, and closed the lantern before the villains could fire.

The fugitives ran forward, expecting each moment to be precipitated into the water. But fortune favored them. They fell against the flagpole, and recovering themselves in a second, slid down the island's steep side.

MacDonald opened the lantern. The boat was at their feet. They sprang into it. MacDonald handed Helen the lantern, cut the rope, grasped the oars, and they were afloat.

At this moment three of the robbers, waving pistols, gained the summit of the bank.

"Shut the lantern," MacDonald cried.

Before Helen could obey the cavern rang with a discharge of firearms. The three men threw up their hands and fell forward into the water.

MacDonald knew that his friends had come to the rescue just in time. He looked behind him, and saw on the lava shelf his five brave companions waving their hands.

Awed by the fate of their comrades, the five robbers on the island surrendered themselves, and, with most of the property they had stolen, were taken back to Albuquerque in triumph.

Young MacDonald, the fair Helen and their five gallant friends were received with raptures by Col. Bleeker and his wife and were lionized by all the people of the city.—J. A. Bolles, in Boston Globe.

No Wonder It Broke.

The couplings between two cars of a train drawing out of the Long Island depot recently parted. The bell rope snapped like the report of a pistol, and the engine and forward section, relieved of the great weight of several runaway cars, leaped forward and started down the track at a frightful speed.

The passengers in the first of the divorced cars hurried to the forward end to watch the rapidly disappearing baggage car and locomotive.

"Oh, what is the matter?" queried an excited woman to her seatmate.

"Nothing serious. Don't alarm yourself, madam," he replied. "The train has merely parted!"

The woman sank back reassured, and then, catching a glimpse of the frayed end of the bell rope, she said: "Well, I don't wonder at it. Did they suppose a little string like that would hold these great, heavy cars together?" N. Y. Herald.

WONDERFUL ORCHIDS.

In These Mysterious Plants Nature Counterfeits Her Own Creations.

Nature is much given to counterfeiting her own works, says a botanist. Among the most remarkable illustrations of this tendency on her part are numerous vegetable imitations of animal life.

You will find the sort of freak best exhibited in plants of the orchid kind, whose odly-formed flowers suggest various queer resemblances.

There are two species, for example, named the bee orchid and the fly orchid, from the likeness between their flowers and these insects.

Other varieties, for similar reasons, are called the man orchid, the lizard orchid and the lady's slipper.

In some species the flowers are like splendid butterflies. One, again, reminds the observer of a grinning monkey; another suggests the aspect of an ordinary opera dancer, suspended by the head; while a third, named the spider orchid, affords a striking likeness to that animal.

Although there are orchids of various kinds to be found in temperate latitudes, the most beautiful species grow in luxuriance where a tropical climate develops these exquisite vegetable forms on the branches of living trees, in the decayed bark of fallen trunks, running over mossy rocks, or hanging suspended from boughs in the untrodden forests.

For a long time it was supposed that this most curious tribe in all the vegetable kingdom could not be subjected to the uses of the gardener, but it has been discovered of late years that with care and perseverance they can be brought to as high a perfection in a greenhouse as they obtain in their native woods.

It is chiefly in the forests of South America that the species which grown on the bark of trees are found. Some of them are known as air plants, from their power of vegetating when simply suspended in the air, without any soil or direct supply of water, supported only by the atmosphere.

When hung up by strings from the ceiling of a room they will live for months, and will go on blossoming luxuriantly. Such orchids are favorite ornaments of houses in China and Japan.

There are nearly two thousand known species of orchids. Probably as many more remain undiscovered in the depths of unexplored tropical forests. He who comes upon a new one obtains as much glory as is got by the discovery of a star.

It seems curious that, whereas these plants are spread over nearly all the world, as far as the borders of the frozen zone, there should be so few kinds that are useful in any way to man.

Vanilla is an orchid, which in the West Indies creeps over trees and walls like ivy. A substance called "salep," somewhat resembling arrowroot or sago, is obtained from the tubers of a variety that grows in Turkey and Persia, where it is highly esteemed.

Some of the South American species yield by boiling a sort of glue, utilized by the Brazilians for fastening leather together. These are the only orchids that are of utility to mankind.—Boston Globe.

SNIFKINS WENT HUNGRY.

How He Lost a Square Meal Through Beauty in Distress.

Young Snifkins had been travelling in hard luck. At least that is how he expressed himself. He had managed to eke out a bare living by making sketches from time to time for an enterprising firm who used his drawings to illustrate their extensive advertisements.

But with the close of the Christmas season poor Snifkins found his occupation gone, the firm having notified him that his services were no longer required.

Snifkins left his room one morning last week feeling that the last straw had been applied. He could no longer bear the burden. Visions of suicide by various methods began to flit through his brain when it suddenly occurred to him that he was hungry. He consulted his finances and found that he had exactly ninety cents. "At least," he thought, "I'll have one square meal and then"——

"Why, Mr. Snifkins! How do you do? I'm so glad to see you!"

Mr. Snifkins looked up at the fair creature who had broken in upon his reverie. It was a pleasing vision. She was petite and pretty, and more than once had Snifkins felt his heart flutter when in her presence.

"Indeed, Miss Grace," he replied, "I am right glad to see you. But where are you going?" Snifkins had forgotten all about his intended suicide—and his appetite.

"I'm going to a florist's," replied the dear creature, "and you must come with me. I'm going to buy some bunches of holly. We're going to decorate our Sunday-school, you know. And"—with a bewitching smile—"you'll help me carry the holly home, won't you?"

Of course he would. He would be only too happy. He watched her while she was making her purchase. Then he noticed her fumbling about her pockets.

"How stupid," she remarked. "I declare I've left my purse at home. Well," addressing Snifkins, "I hate to bother you, Mr. Snifkins, but I've forgotten my purse. I need eighty-seven cents. If you will—"

"Oh, certainly, with pleasure," replied the young man, handing out his last ninety cents. "Would you like any more?"

"This is quite sufficient," she answered. "Thank goodness!" mentally ejaculated Mr. Snifkins as he trudged along by her side carrying the bunches of holly. Then he remembered how hungry he was, and wondered whether he would ask him to dinner. As for the young lady herself she regaled her companion with all sorts of airy nothings as they walked along, and when they had reached her home the episode of Snifkin's eighty-seven cents had entirely slipped her memory.

"I am so much obliged, my dear Mr. Snifkins," she exclaimed, relieving the latter of his burden, as the servant, in response to her ring had opened the door. "Do come and see me some time. I would ask you in now, but we are just about to dine and we are going to have such a wretched dinner to-day."

That was all. She had disappeared, and poor, hungry Snifkins, with his three solitary coppers, wended his way up town in silence.—N. Y. Herald.

The New Bread.

ROYAL unfermented bread, made without yeast, avoiding the decomposition produced in the flour by yeast or other baking powder; peptic, palatable and most healthful; may be eaten warm and fresh without discomfort, which is not true of bread made in any other way.

Can be made only with Royal Baking Powder.

Receipt for Making One Loaf.

ONE quart flour, 1 teaspoonful salt, half a teaspoonful sugar, 2 heaping teaspoonfuls Royal Baking Powder, half medium-sized cold boiled potato, and water. Sift together thoroughly flour, salt, sugar, and baking powder; rub in the potato; add sufficient water to mix smoothly and rapidly into a stiff batter, about as soft as for pound-cake; about a pint of water to a quart of flour will be required—more or less according to the brand and quality of the flour used. Do not make a stiff dough, like yeast bread. Pour the batter into a greased pan, 4½x8 inches, and 4 inches deep, filling about half full. The loaf will rise to fill the pan when baked. Bake in very hot oven 45 minutes, placing paper over first 15 minutes baking, to prevent crusting too soon on top. Bake at once. Don't mix with milk.

Breadmakers using this receipt who will write us the result of their experience will receive, free, the most practical cook book published, containing 1000 receipts for all kinds of cooking. Address Royal Baking Powder Co., 106 Wall Street, New York.

CABLEGRAMS FROM EUROPE.

A LAUNDRY in England owned by women and employing only women earned $25,000 last year.

A FRENCH doctor recently celebrated his one hundredth birthday anniversary, and the fact was commented upon that among the large number present who had been his patients not one was over fifty years old, and most of them were much younger.

THE cholera commission of the senate of Hamburg has decided that all medical students who volunteered their services during the cholera epidemic there "in the belief that their services were to be remunerated" shall be paid at the rate of 20 marks ($5) a day.

IN Rome there is much talk about an old beggar who used to frequent the doors of the Church of the Minerva, and who, dying lately, was found to be possessed of 100,000 francs, which he had left by a properly drawn up will to his three children, who were completely ignorant of their father's wealth.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

Shortest Route to the Kootenai.

BONNERS FERRY, Idaho, March 11.—This has not only become the principal town in the American Kootenai, but it is also the entrepot of the British Columbia Kootenai, the route to Pilot Bay, Ainsworth, Nelson, Kaslo, the Slocan and Lardo-Duncan districts via this place from the East, being over three hundred miles nearer than by way of Spokane. Kootenai Lake is fifteen miles nearer St. Paul via this city and the Great Northern than the total distance from Spokane to St. Paul, by the same railroad, and which road, too, is the shortest route to Spokane. The stages are kept busy now, and when the river opens fast steamers will be ready to take care of all business to river and lake points.

THE diamond is the hardest of substances. No one appreciates this fact more than the engaged young man.—Ram's Horn.

THE Louisville, New Albany & Chicago has just added to its rolling-stock two new sleeping and boudoir cars, costing nearly $45,000 each. These cars are said to be the finest ever placed on any road in the country, and are specially designed for use during the World's Columbian Exposition.—Chicago Tribune.

These cars are models of elegance and beauty, each Compartment or Boudoir being fitted with a complete toilet set, cleverly hidden from view when not in use. They are in daily service between Chicago and Cincinnati, and should be seen and used to be fully appreciated. All of the Monon's through day trains are made up of smoking cars, new coaches and Parlor and Dining Cars. JAMES BARKER, G. P. A.

ATTENTION is called to the Improved Victor Incubator advertised in another column. The manufacturers (an old established firm) guarantee this incubator to be simple, easy of operation, durable, and that the heat regulator used will keep the temperature in egg chamber at incubation heat regardless of variations in the outside temperature. The price of this hatcher is far lower than that of any other first class incubator, and it will pay customers to send 4 cents in stamps to Geo. Ertel & Co., Quincy, Ill., for a copy of their finely illustrated catalogue.

PISO'S CURE FOR 25 CTS. 25 CTS. CONSUMPTION
'The Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists.

We offer you a ready made medicine for Coughs, Bronchitis, and other diseases of the Throat and Lungs. Like other so called Patent Medicines, it is well advertised, and having merit it has attained a wide sale under the name of Piso's Cure for Consumption.

It is now a "Nostrum," though at first it was compounded after a prescription by a regular physician, with no idea that it would ever go on the market as a proprietary medicine. But after compounding that prescription over a thousand times in one year, we named it "Piso's Cure for Consumption," and began advertising it in a small way. A medicine known all over the world is the result.

Why is it not just as good as though costing fifty cents to a dollar for a prescription and an equal sum to have it put up at a drug store?

DELANO DIARY

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—Read on the inside of this paper, the "School Fund Apportionment" and the "Amended bill for Free Text Books."

—Call on George Schaffer and tell him you read in the GAZETTE that his fine stock of Notions and Spring goods had arrived.

—A pleasant sociable was held at Sherry's residence last night. The roads were tolerable, plenty of snow and the crisp air was refreshing and the trip and entertainment enjoyed by all.

—It has not yet been figured out whether the Delano village election went Republican, Prohibitionist, Anti-Catholic, Anti-Saloon, or People's Party. At any rate it is not Democratic. It's strange but it's true that 6 out of 8 of the elected fellows are Odd.

—The following named persons from Montrose and Watertown visited at the M. E. manse last evening. Mr. and Mrs. Douglass, Mr. and Mrs. Smoots, Mr. and Mrs. Streeter, Mr. and Mrs. Halgren, Mr. and Mrs. Haven, Miss Kittie Haven, Prof. Sage, Miss Nelson, Miss Lena Wright and Mr. Frank McKee.

—Notices were posted that the Annual Election of the village would be held on Tuesday between the hours of 9 o'clock in the forenoon and 5 o'clock, in the afternoon. Several of our villagers thought this would be so, and deferred voting until near the latter named hour and when they appeared at the polls they were informed that the polls closed at 4 P. M., consequently lost their votes.

--Quite an interesting essay by Ed. Freeman appears in another column. The young man flies up in a minute if you call him anything but a Republican, yet his argument against sumptuary laws is such as would make Henry Watterson scratch his head to beat. He seems to think too there is other business than voting, for women. Be careful, Ed. or you will be coming Gresham on the folks.

—At the meeting of the board of education held on Saturday, last the Board voted to give $45, toward the purchase of library books this being an equal amount with that raised through the efforts of Principal Dewey and others. This will give an additional supply of $90. worth of books from which our scholars and others can gather much information on many useful topics.

--At a regularly called Democratic caucus for the Town of Franklin held in Delano, on Saturday. Wm. Sturman was chosen chairman, Clark Sturman, Secretary and a ticket nominated as follows: Supervisors, James Sherry, Chairman: Mat. Schaust, Wm. Leiter: Clerk, Wm. Kespohl: Treasurer, E. F. Ziebarth; Assessor, Wm. Sturman. Soon after the adjournment another caucus was held which made the same nominations except placing Jos Bauman on the Board of Supervisors and Henry Schwiren, for Assessor.

—On Saturday morning at an early hour as Henry Bock was coming to town down the R. R. track he was greatly shocked to find the remains of what had been a man, strung along the track for several rods, about a mile west of town. On investigation by people from town they proved to be those of an elderly Norweigan who had been around town drunk, for several days, and who had given his name as Ole Heegaard. He claimed to have a daughter at Grove City. Deputy Coroner Shrader got together what he could of the pieces and had them buried.

--The Eagle appears to be powerfully pestered about the GAZETTE, and brags about hireing nearly a dozen hands. When the Eagle was a Democrat she didn't hire so many. And every newspaper man knows that a good smart man and a boy is all that any one need to hire to get out such a bird, especially when so much of it comes already to make up, at 25 cts or so, per column. Don't do so everlasting much blowing, even if you do have a nice brick office. Whats to hinder when, as you claim, you "have made more money swearing old soldiers to pension papers than the GAZETTE and the assessor have in ready cash?" Or words to that effect, referring to the then assessor. Whats the use of parading your "riches" weekly? And trying to break down every business adventure, no, under your thumb, that comes along. And run every man you do not agree with out of the village, or out of the country? Try and ameliorate your criticisms, just a little, at first, and gradually you may become so softened in disposition as to be able to at least speak to some of your fellow townsmen, whom you now pass by without deigning to say "How do you do Sir?"

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

--Call at this office for a story book, found near Jacob Henn's place.

—Rev. Davies has been to Montrose a good share of the week engaged in church work.

—Quinn Brothers, of Waverly, have their "seeder" agents in the field so soon. A pathognomonic symptom of Spring.

—The Democratic village committee for the ensuing year appointed at Monday evening's caucus is T. J. Catlin, Joseph Cramer and N. K. Coffin.

—Contrary to the expressed wishes of the editor of the GAZETTE the Democratic caucus instead of being called as early as Thursday evening was not called until Monday evening before election. We never favored such snap games.

—The village election passed off very quietly, resulting in a complete victory for the People's Ticket. Elsewhere we give the names of the officers elected. They appear to be a good set of men, and calculated to run the government on an economical and safe plan. We do not apprehend that they will be guilty of any serious mistakes. From our knowledge of their independent beliefs we would not wonder if they would insist on the saloons keeping their end of the bargain and observing the law concerning Sabbath and eleven o'clock at night closing, and in regard to card playing. At all events it would be well for that thusly engaged to look a "leetle oudt" and some of the merchants may be caught in the Sunday closing net. It is possible too, that they will employ a competent engineer to locate sidewalks, (possibly saving litigation, in ordering them built where the grading is not done) also to locate proper drains so that people and especially most of the school children will not be called upon to longer daily inhale the deadly germs of disease arising from the nuisance of a pond on 2nd st. And while he is here he might extend a few of the streets into the suburbs so that some of our tax-payers may have the privilege of coming to the post office without climbing their neighbor's fences. Possibly they may take it upon themselves to furnish water in cisterns or by some other plan, in case of fire, on streets away from the river. Then an electric lamp system has been talked of; perhaps some light on this subject may be obtained. A public park may serve as a place to spend a portion of the village funds before land advances in price, and while there is still available vacant lots not too remote from the heart of the village to be of use. Profiting by the experience of the former council who found it impossible to meet their running expenses and at the same time pay the debts contracted by those who had preceded them, by several years, of course the incoming administration will be a little shy of reducing the funds on hand too rapidly. It is well for the people to consider these things and talk them over among themselves and see what is the best means of getting rid of a good sized pile of money derived from the liquor license, and without which people formerly run villages, and cities.

Blinded by Exploding Lime.

ZANESVILLE, O., March 11.—J. C. Young, of Cooksville, a small village near this city, was slacking lime in a bucket this morning when the lime exploded, filling his eyes with the caustic substance, and before relief could be obtained the sight of both eyes was destroyed.

Personals.

Roadmaster Costello was in town yesterday.

Mrs. Dewey came up from the city yesterday evening.

The Minneapolis District Conference of the M. E. church meets at Buffalo on April 17, 18 and 19. Presiding Elder Stafford is to preside.

From the Sherburne county Star-News we learn that Lou Harwick and J. P. Taylor have been on a pilgrimage to Washington, and that they lost none of their Democracy by the trip.

J. F. McDonnell, of Waverly, passed through town yesterday en route for Maple Lake where he is to deliver the oration at the St. Patrick's day celebration. As an orator J. F. is coming to the front.

Considerable talk is already being indulged in concerning the candidacy at the next election of Hon. A. Y. Eaton for member of Congress from this district. It has not yet been decided on what ticket his name will appear.

Wright county boys should keep a weather eye on the newspapers for the official announcement of the competetive examination reported to be held soon, in Duluth, by Congressman Baldwin, for the purpose of selecting a cadet to fill a vacancy. Let Wright county come to the front on this occasion. These chances don't occur every day, and west point is a good school.

Town of Franklin Meeting.

At the town meeting held in Steffe's hall, on Tuesday. An iron bridge was voted at Wright's ford. A tax of $900 was voted for Roads and Bridges, and for Poor. A resolution was passed forbiddding the board of Supervisors allowing bills which had been rejected by former boards. A resolution to build a town hall was voted down. Road overseers were chosen from men who had road tax to work out. At times the oratory was somewhat on the eloquent order. The ticket headed Franklin Town Ticket was elected.

An Idea of Senator Bell's.

Senator Bell, of Hennepin, introduced an important bill yesterday providing for the appointment by the governor of a board of five examiners, one of whom shall be the state superintendent of public instruction, which board shall examine all applicants for certificates as teachers in the public schools. The board shall have the right to grant certificates without examination to those who can present diplomas from reputable colleges or give other evidence that they are fit persons to be placed in charge of schools. Dr. Bell says that there is a great demand on the part of the teachers for a bill of this nature.—Minneapolis Times.

The blind-pig and whiskey element in Wallmar is getting desperate and have been writing some awful letters to Prof. Hilleboe and Rev. Gynild, threatening death and destruction to these gentlemen if they do not cease to prosecute the law breakers. The letters contain the vilest language and are adorned with cross skulls, corpses, coffins and signed "Mystic League, White Caps." However, these gentlemen do not scare worth a cent.—Cokato Commoner.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

A PHILOSOPHER.

Zack Bumsted uster flosserfize
About the ocean and the skies:
An' gab an' gas fum morn till noon
About the other side the moon;
An 'bout the nature of the place
Ten miles beyond the end of space.
An' if his wife sh'd ask the crank
Ef she wouldn't kinder try to yank
Herself out doors an' get some wood
To make her kitchen fire good.
So she c'd bake her beans an' pies,
He'd says: "I've gotter flosserfize."

An' then he'd set and flosserfize
About the natur an' the size
Of angel's wings, an' think an' gawp,
An' wonder how they made 'em flop.
He wondered of you bored a hole
Right through the yerth from pole to pole,
An' then should trip an' stumble through,
The best thing you had oughter do.
H'd calkerlate how long a skid
'Twould take to move the sun, he did,
An' if the skid was strong an' prime,
It couldn't be moved to supper time.
An' w'n his wife u'd ask the lout
Ef she wouldn' kinder waltz about
An' take a rag an' shoo the flies,
He'd say: "I've gotter flosserfize."

An' then he'd set and flosserfize
'Bout schemes for fencing in the skies,
Then lettin' out the lots to rent
So's he c'd make an honest cent
An' ef he'd find it pooty tough
To borry cash for fencin' stuff;
An' if 'twere best to take his wealth
An' go to Europe for his health,
Or save his wealth till h'd enough
To buy some more of fencin' stuff—
Then, ef his wife she'd, ask the gump
Ef he wouldn't kinder try to hump
Himself to t'other side the door
So she c'd come an sweep the floor.
He'd look at her with mournful eyes
An' say: "I've gotter flosserfize."

An' so he'd set an flosserfize,
'Bout what it wuz held up the skies,
An' how God made this earthly ball
Jest simply outer nawathin' 'tall,
An' 'bout the natur, shape an' form.
Of nawthin' that he made it from.
Then, if his wife sh'd ask the freak
Ef he wouldn' kinder try to sneak
Out to the barn an' find some algs
He'd never move nor lift his laigs
An' never stir nor try to rize
But say: "I gottor flosserfize."

An' so he'd set en flosserfize
About the earth an' sea an' skies,
An' scratch his head an' ask the cause
Of what there wuz before time was,
An' what the universe 'ud do
Bimeby w'en time hed all got through;
An' jest how fur we'd hev to climb
Ef we sh'ld travel out er time,
An' of we'd need w'en we got there
To keep our watches in repair.
Then, ef his wife sh'd ask the gawk
Ef he wouldn' kinder try to walk
To where she had the table spread
An' kinder git his stomach fed,
He'd leap for that yar kitchen door
An' say: "Why didn't you speak afore?"

An' w'en he got his supper et
He'd set, an' set, an' set, an' set,
An' fold his arms an' shet his eyes,
An' set, an' set, and flosserfize.

THE coal combine was roasted last night at the mass meeting in St Paul to the satisfaction of one of the largest gatherings ever held in market hall. Ringing resolutions endorsing the Senate committee were passed.

JUDGE WILLIAM LOCHREN, of Minneapolis is said to be the President's choice for Commissioner of Pensions. The judge is as much surprised as any one at the announcement. He will do the office justice and be an honor to our state.

WHENEVER a delicate operation is to be performed on the local republican party Dr. Bill King is always called in. The Doctor has a steady nerve and a wonderful touch, and after he has operated the patient always dies, but with less pain than any other physician would cause.—Minneapolis Times.

The above named is said to have once upon a time extended the field of his practice to Wright county, and to have included among his patients others than Republicans, and to give him his dues, the patient, politically speaking, seems to have met the fate of his Hennepin brethren.

QUITE a commotion was kicked up in the Senate last week, when an investigating committee sent the sergeant-at-arms to bring before them the books of the Coal combine which one Rhodes had sworn they did not have. The courts, represented by Judge Egan, tried to make believe that they were bigger than the Minnesota legislature, which created them. The Senate, through Senator Donnelly, would not have it so, claimed the right to spank their own offsprings when they saw fit, and if coal combines and such things got mixed up with matters under their jurisdiction they had the right to investigate and bring them to terms, or to time, or to respectable prices at least. The average American citizen is not "stuck" on combines, in Minnesota.

IN passing the Free Text Book bill the Legislature seems to have solved the much vexed question of whether the Catholics shall have public money with which to run their schools, in the affirmative. Districts where Catholics are in the majority have, only to vote to have free text books, and then see that their choice of books is purchased from the contractors who may make application to the superintendent of Public Instruction to sell their books to the district officers and with their own books furnished out of the public school fund raised for that purpose their school will, to all intents and purposes be a parochial school if they desire so to have it.

ALL kinds of abusive things continue to appear in the newspapers concerning Grover Cleveland and his heads of departments selections for Post officers and other positions which it is in their power to fill. It has been given out that as a rule "no man who held office before will be appointed now," that, "no merchants are to be included among the appointees," that, "no editors of country newspapers will be favored with office," that "no drinkers are to fill post offices and be included among appointees."

We don't take very much stock in all these remarks. Maybe there is some truth in some of them and may be they are mostly gotten up by some outside parties, for effect. At any rate we believe the men receiving the appointments, as a rule, will be men capable of attending to the business assigned to them.

That Town Pump.

For many years the town pump has been a fixture in our village. It has been among us so long that many of the younger portion of our population know not the time when they could not slake their thirst, there, in the sultry summer days. Many a weary traveler and his horses can speak of it, only in terms of praise, having first made the acquaintance of this public benefactor while passing through our village. While, on several occasions, as when the patriotic American citizens for miles around come to town, once a year, with hearts throbbing, and months parched, to celebrate the birthday of our nation, the town pump has furnished the pure sparkling water to assuage the thirst of many hundreds of people, of all nations that dwell among us, and they are many. Those who have been reared in foreign lands, who maybe have quenched their thirst from the long Volga, the winding Rhine, the mighty Danube or the Bug who have lived along the banks of the Dal, the Seine, the Loire, or, perhaps, have crossed the Avon or the Ayre, came together here for one common purpose. What an inspiring scene?. How proud our citizens should be to find all these people mingling together to celebrate the founding of one of the most glorious countries under the sun. All coming, equally free, to partake without price, of this public blessing! How we should, as a village, having charge of this means of sending many on their way rejoicing strive to keep it in order. Keep the machinery greased, and see to it that the water is pure by draining the surface water away from it. And, by every means in our power, keeping it as it has been a popular resort for the thirsty, and a blessing to the weary traveler, and an honor to our town. We have among us, sad to tell, an individual who has dared to speak depricatingly of this benefactor, who has sought to disparage it, to insinuate that it is belittling to even live near it, and yet, its nearest neighbors are the most choice. On the northeast we have a fashionable millinery store, the band stand, a beautiful park, and a liberty pole, south the depot of the Great Northern, R. way; west the scene stretches clear to the Crow River near where stands the tallest liberty pole, surmounted by the highest rooster in Wright county, and on which, occasionally floats the starpangled banner emblem of our free country, and the pride of every true, loyal citizen. A cistern for furnishing water, in case of fire, is near; while on the west stands one of the first built houses in Delano, now occupied, overhead, by a photographer, of no mean ability, while on the first floor is printed the GAZETTE, which always sticks up through thick and thin for whatever is right, and who does not propose to allow anyone to cast slurs on so good a friend to the public without resenting the insult. Now whenever you mention this part of town again just remember it is one of the most respectable in the village, and speak of it accordingly.

AMONG other things in an article communicated to the Aitkin Age, we notice "but certain it is that any day we see on our streets young youths who should be at school and not idling their time away, and when asked why they are not at school they tell the same story—'Expelled.'" From this passage we infer that a lack of discipline in the school, or the interference of overofficious school officers, having no children of their own to attend, and seeking to direct others how to control children, a thing about which they know very little, have hit upon the plan of "expelling" children from school rather than making them mind, and trying to make men and women of them. How must a child of tender years feel when expelled from school? Cast out of the society of its playmates, and jeered and scoffed at by them? Is there any reason to suppose their feelings are other than those possessed by larger persons who are ostracised from society; who are made out laws? Will not the same passions that possessed the Youngers, and the James, and their associates, on whose heads prices were set, swell their young hearts with indignation, with hatred for what is right, and what is good, in at least some degree. Is it not better to keep the schoolable child in school and to punish him as he deserves, with a keen switch, not pound him over the head with a chair round, nor with a ruler, but on some part of the body where no lasting effects will remain and where the impression on the mind will be for more salutary?

Usually one or two ring leaders of mischief are to be found in a school room, and when the teacher has obtained the upper hand of them he has conquered the school, and it is not necessary to keep up a switching on every scholar every day. There is usually one or more that must be punished in order to have perfect order, and to this extent we agree with Edward Eggleston that "lickin' and larnin' go together."

Our school board had a number of scholars suspended for damaging books and other property, but have come to see the folly of such a proceedure, and all have been reinstated. It is to be hoped that our neighbors at Aitkin, and at other places, may come to look at this matter in its right light and act accordingly. Don't make outcasts and outlaws of your children unless you desire to have the next generation of men and women consist of people of that character. Give the children the best chance there is. And as the Age's correspondent suggests call around at the school house occasionally and see for yourselves what is going on.

One trouble is in the selection of school officers who have no children to send to school, and who take the office for the honor, the money they can make out of it, or the influence they can wield politically or otherwise; and not that they care particularly "whether school keeps or not," and if it does, "whether the children go or stay away." Only men who have children in attendance at the school, as a rule, are fitted for the positions of school officers. Even if their own education and their business qualifications are not quite up to those of all the wealthy old bachelors in the district they are interested in having their children educated and will generally do what they can to have a good school.

Tariff Pictures.

On August 31, 1865, this government was paying interest on its public debt at the rate of $4.29 per capita. In 1892 the interest charge was $0.84

a result worked out by twenty-seven years of Republican protection.—New York Press.

And the Press advocates the McKinley bill, which raises, rather than lowers proctection! She asks the people of this country when they buy goods, of almost any kind, to put more money into the United States Treasury, if the article purchased happen to have been made in foreign lands. After more than a quarter of a century, during which time people have quietly submitted to tariff, and paid off this tremendious war, debt, so rapidly, they are asked to take upon themselves additional burdens; to tax themselves still more; for what? The Press says the debt is reduced so much. Why not then reduce rather than raise the tariff? What do they need this vast aggregation of wealth for? What use has been made of it? Do the people of the country need a respite, a little loosening up of their obligations, or, does the Government still need to build monuments, to their folly like the Mammoth Post office structure at Chicago, which is crumbling down, from its very weight. Do they wish to continue to build such offices costing millions, in all the larger cities of every state in the union, notwithstanding the late Postmaster General John Wanamaker, in his report for the year, ending June 30, 1892, says in such decisive and plain language, that the "Wayfaring man though a fool need not err therein," "The erection of immense costly buildings for post-offices ought to be stopped, and the Department would be allowed to expend a fixed sum of from one to five million dollars each year in the erection of buildings upon a fixed plan, such as Postmaster-General Vilas recommended." If the warnings of these men, who are most familar with the workings of the Post office system and other officers in similar positions in the different branches of the government, were listened to and acted upon would there be any need of increased tariff taxes at this time? We hope and trust that the present administration will look wisely to these things.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 17, 1893.

Senator Gorman, who was chairman of the caucus committee that made the senate committee assignments, and therefore in a position to know whereof he speaks, said, I am reliably informed, by a personal friend: "There has been a lot of nonsense talked and printed about the positions upon the prominent Senate committees having been purposely arranged by the caucus committee so as to be antagonistic to the President. There is absolutely no foundation for any such statements. The assignments of the old Senators were made according to the well-known precedents which have governed such assignments ever since I have been a member of the Senate, and for many years before, and of the new ones according to the best judgment of the committee." Although Senator Gorman did not intend his remarks for publication, it is but justice to him and the members of the committee that they should be made public. This caucus committee had no authority to say that this or that democratic Senator should not have committee positions to which they were entitled by seniority, because of their views upon this or that question, and had it attempted such a thing its would have been repudiated by the caucus, which had to approve its report before it went into effect. It is only in republican papers that there is any antagonism between President Cleveland and the democratic Senators. No administration ever assumed office with a more harmonious party at its back than the present and neither the President nor any prominent democrat in Congress expects or sees any indication of anything to disturb the present pleasant relations between the President and the party, in and out of Congress. Statements to the contrary, if run down, will be found in every case to have originated either with a republican or journalistic sensation monger.

Certainly no one can raise any reasonable objection to the rule made by President Cleveland that no person should be sent as United States consul to an important commercial place who is not a thorough business man. It will not be necessary to go outside the democratic party to find capable business men to fill every consulship maintained by the Government.

Democrats should be extremely careful about accepting as true statements concerning the intentions of President Cleveland which appear in republican papers. A little consideration will convince them of the improbability of republican editors and correspondents being taken into the confidence of Mr. Cleveland. A case in point was the sending broadcast by republican correspondents, a few days ago, of the positive statement that Mr. Cleveland had said that democratic editors need not apply for office as he had made up his mind not to appoint them. Now, Mr. Cleveland never said any such thing, and the nearest approach to a foundation the story had was the President's jocular remark to a Congressman that editors must take their chances with applicants. In order to impress the falsity of this statement upon democrats Mr. Cleveland took especial care that the first nomination of a postmaster sent to the Senate by him should be that of a democratic editor—Mr. Robert B. Brown, of Meadville, Pa.

If there had been any doubt of the wisdom of sending a commission to Hawaii, which has been done by the administration, it would have been dissipated by the talk of the Hawaiian Commissioners after they learned that a commission would be sent to make an investigation. It is evident that they fear the result of that investigation; consequently the suspicion which has existed for sometime in the minds of a few people, that the whole business has been conducted upon a one sided basis, is increasing very rapidly. Honest and straight-forward people never object to the most rigid investigation of their acts. It is always the other sort of fellow who draws himself up and asks "Do you mean to cast aspersions upon my honor, Sir?" President Cleveland only wants what the people want, about this Hawaiian business—the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and ex-Congressman Blount is just the man to get it.

The best evidence of the confidence of the business men of the country in the democratic administration is furnished by the steady increase of gold in the Treasury, which began with the swearing in of democratic officials and has continued right along ever since.

Now that the crowd left here by the inauguration has almost entirely gone the President and the members of his cabinet will have more time to devote to their official duties, and the result will be a large number of appointments in the very near future. As soon as all of the assistant Secretaries in the various departments are nominated and confirmed, the applicants for position under them will have a chance to get their claims considered.

It is expected that the Commissioner of Pensions will be appointed before the first of April, as it is known that Mr. Cleveland is particularly anxious for a speedy change in that office

MAPLE PLAIN MUSINGS.

A second special school meeting was held in the Maple Plain Presbyterian church last Monday evening to ascertain how many had changed the mind in a month concerning the height of a proposed new school building. At the first meeting, only two voted for a two story building and now at this meeting, twenty-six votes was cast for a two story and nine for one story. The meeting was called for 7 P. M. but the meeting was not called to order until 8:15 P. M. The reason for not opening the meeting have not as yet fully been learned. One man was asked, the reason, and he answered your correspondent, they were waiting for the man in the moon, another said they were waiting for the man in the star, but the third man asked (I think was better informed) said they were waiting for the self-appointed Shaver delegation to arrive on the 8 P. M. passenger train from Minneapolis. They came home all right as expected, but with long noses, as they could not induce the commissioner to confirm Shaver. Contrary to the delegates expectation the county commissioners think they have found a rat in the superintendent's office in the shape of a catalogue printing scheme. But Shaver's pretended friends seem to have good hopes of the retention of Shaver, and they now propose to have a second story on the school house. They say they are going to have a second grade assistant superintendent also. But your correspondent and a great many others are in hopes that our county commissioners will be able to bring this second grade, (according to Commissioner Egan's statement in the Times) ex-assistant superintendent down from the chestnut tree. It was easy for Shayer to get up in the tree having his uncle to give him a lift occasionally but he (Shayer) acts like a cat having to come down backward but if he (Shayer) is not competent to examine applicants for a first grade certificate he had better come down at once. MR. OLNEY makes the sixth attorney general selected from the state of Massachusetts, since the formation of the government.

THE pronunciation of the deposed Hawaiian queen's name is a simple matter if one remembers to give the "u" the value of "w." It then sounds like Leelee-woka-lanny.

THE Philadelphia Record has discovered that Pennsylvania is the banner state in the union for "women postmistresses." Men postmistresses have always been very rare, not only in Pennsylvania, but everywhere else.

ARCHBISHOP WALSH is reported as quoting some remarkable statistics illustrating a great increase of habitual drunkards in Ireland. The convictions for drunkenness in 1887, he said, numbered 79,000; in 1888, 87,000; in 1889, 92,000; and in 1891, 100,528.

AT Harvard the decree has gone forth that scholarship money will not hereafter be paid except to students who need it. Rich men's sons will have to be content with the honors conferred without having a check inclosed in their diplomas.

MYRA CLARK GAINES left an estate worth $925,000 when she died, in 1887. The lawyers have absorbed $800,000 of it in fighting over her will and hope to be able to get away with the remainder in the new trial which they have just commenced.

THE motto of the Arkansas Thomas Cat, published at Hot Springs, is: "God help the rich—the poor can beg." Its standing candidates for president and vice president are Dr. Mary Walker and Susan B. Anthony; on the platform: "Anything to beat the devil."

SOME of the leading newspapers in this country and England are discussing the question: "Shall women propose?" What's the use of saying anything about it? If women want to propose they will do it, just as they will wear crinoline if they finally so decide, notwithstanding their present opposition to the fashion.

GOV. MCKINLEY'S relations with Mr. Walker began when the former gentleman was a young and struggling lawyer. Mr. Walker at that time made advances of money to him to tide him over difficult places. The pecuniary debt was repaid, but Mr. McKinley always felt that he was still under an obligation to his friend for the kindness exhibited.

A CORRESPONDENT asks if the "different denominations of silver coin are coined at different mints, or all of them at every mint." The Philadelphia mint is the only one making all denominations. All other mints coin only the dollar, excepting that at San Francisco, which, since 1885, has coined also the dime. Prior to 1879 the mints at Carson and San Francisco coined all denominations, as did that at New Orleans previous to 1861.

NATURE is often a tender nurse for old age. She soothes and comforts by her delusions. Mme. de Lesseps overheard the old count talking to himself the other day. "Yes," said he, "we are honest people. I have toiled up to the last moment. I am a good workman. If all that I have done is not recognized here I shall go to Queen Victoria. She knows me. I shall approach her with my wife and children. I shall put on my grand cordon."

EVEN in conservative old Mexico, where woman's status is popularly supposed to be about the same as in Spain, the gentler sex is gradually encroaching upon man's domain. The other day two belles of Monterey, enamored of the same young man, decided to settle the matter according to the code duello, and if some meddlesome person had not given the police a tip there would have been a shooting mach at thirty paces. The young gentleman who has to choose between two such peppery damsels is not to be envied.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY is of the opinion that we are on the verge of an era of unmarried women. Our civilization, she says, is changing. Daughters cannot be supported at home and there is nothing there to busy them. The women used to spin and weave, make carpets and soap, but now all that is done for them in the factories. Young men do not make enough money to support their wives, and there is such a craze for dissipation among them that the women would rather go into a store for almost nothing than to marry.

THE Maine steamboat engineer was polite and attentive. It may be that he was flattered by the fact that a lady so impressive in her manner should come to him for information. At any rate he told her all about it, just where the steam went into the cylinder, where it escaped, and how it was that the piston rod attached to the crank turned the wheels that propelled the little vessel through the waves. She appeared to be all wrapped up in the information, and when he had finished she turned a beaming face upon him and said: "Now, what is the object of the boiler?"

AN Omaha judge has introduced a new feature in divorce legislation. A man's wife sued him for divorce and then, becoming reconciled to her husband, abandoned prosecution. Her attorney presented a bill of $500, which she refused to pay. He then sued the husband for the bill and recovered, the judge holding that divorces are a necessary of life. It is difficult to see how a divorce, which the wife herself declared that she did not want, could have been so considered. If husbands are to be liable for their wives' divorce bills, a responsibility of serious importance has been added to matrimony.

THE county of Fresno, Cal., boasts of a flume 52 miles long, built of timber throughout and destined for conveying lumber from the place of felling in the Sierra Nevada mountains to the plains below. In section the flume is V shaped. The V is 21 inches deep and for the most part 3 feet 7 inches across the top, this width being increased at various points where a decrease in the grade necessitates a larger volume of water to carry the timber, the lower terminus being 5 feet 4 inches wide by 31 inchesdeep. The main supply of water is received from a lake near its head, but four additional feeders are led into it at different points.

LATER NEWS.

THE big Kehlor flouring mill at Litchfield, Ill., was destroyed by fire and dust explosion during the early morning hours of the 21st. While the employes and firemen were fighting the flames, a terrific explosion, caused by flour dust, occurred, and the immense structure was blown to fragments. The explosion wrecked nearly every business place in the village. Many persons were hurt by flying bricks and falling timbers. The damage to the mill alone will reach $600,000, and other property was damaged over $150,000. The shock was felt in the adjoining villages of Clyde, Butler, Gillespie and Hillsborough, and in many of these places the concussion was so great that plate glass windows were broken. Those known to be badly injured by flying glass and timbers are: Mrs. R. Eichoride, Mrs. P. Lynch, John Donoghue, Joseph Neuther and John Kaveney. Their injuries are severe, but will not prove fatal. The fire was discovered by the night watchman in the bran room of the flour mill. In less than two minutes the flames reached the flour rolling room and an explosion of dust followed. The night watchman was hurled through a window and badly injured. Millwright John Cowie was stunned by the shock, and, unable to escape, he was burned to death. LEGISLATIVE NOTES.

Items Regarding the Doings of Legislators at the Capitol.

An important bill has appeared in the house providing for a court of appeals, the same having been agreed to by the bar of the state. By the bill the state is divided into appellate judicial districts as follows:

1. The Second and Fourth judicial districts.
2. The First, Third, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, Tenth and Thirteenth districts.
3. The Seventh, Ninth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth judicial districts.

An appeal can be taken to this court of appeals in the following cases:

1. From a judgment in an action commenced in the district court or a municipal court, or brought there from another court from any judgment rendered in such court, and upon the appeal from such judgment may renew any intermediate order involving the merits or necessarily affecting the judgment.
2. From an order granting or refusing a provisional remedy or which grants, refuses or dissolves or refuses to dissolve an injunction or an order vacating or sustaining an attachment.
3. From an order involving the merits of the action or some part thereof.
4. From an order granting or refusing a new trial or from an order sustaining or overruling a demurrer.
5. From an order which in effect determines the action and prevents a judgment from which an appeal might be taken.
6. From a final order affecting a substantial right made in a special proceeding, or upon a summary application in an action after judgment.

There is to be one appellate judge elected in each district, whose pay shall be $4,000 per year, the first judges appointed by the governor, and the terms to be six years. All district judges of the appellate districts are made members of the appellate court, but the districts are so arranged that no district judge shall sit in review of any decision he has made. There are to be five terms a year of the appellate court.

The bill is offered, and will be urged, as the means agreed to on all hands as the best to relieve the overburdened condition of the supreme court, which is between one and two years behind in its work.

Within 10 days after the filing of such statement furnish and file in the office of the state treasurer a list showing the number of acres of land so surveyed and remaining unsold. The state treasurer shall annually pay out of the state treasury to the several counties in which the lands are situated a sum equal to 3 cents per acre for each acre of such land.

The ladies seem to have won their fight in the senate, for, by a vote of 26 to 14, the bill giving women the right of suffrage was recommended to pass by the committee of the whole. It was not the original bill that went through, but a much stronger one, which struck the word "male" out of the portion of the constitution declaring who shall vote.

The senate committee on grain and warehouses were addressed by Atty. Gen. Standish of North Dakota. Mr. Standish's object was to get the committee to introduce a bill to give the state exclusive control over a site for a state elevator to be built at the head of the lakes. The North Dakota legislature appropriated $100,000 for the erection of the elevator. The committee favorably viewed the request and will introduce a bill. All of those present were in favor of legislation of some kind looking toward free books, but were not particular as to what the law was so long as they got free books

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Doings of the State Law Makers at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, March 15.—It was a day of debate in both branches of the legislature. In the house the surveyor general bill and the new capitol resolution were the questions under consideration and at times the debate was nearly personal. The surveyor general bill, providing for a new log scale, etc., came up in the shape of two reports of the committee. After an hour's debate both measures were put on general orders. The new capitol proposition was next taken in hand, but no conclusion reached, the same being made a special order for the next day at 2 p. m.

In the senate, Senator Tawney introduced a bill providing that incorporated cities may aid in the construction of wagon roads and bridges. After recess the senate received a report from the judiciary committee on S. F. 280, a bill for submission of a constitutional amendment granting women municipal suffrage and making them eligible to hold city, county and village offices. This is a substitute for the original bill, which was merely a legislative enactment. The substitute was read twice and placed on general orders, being taken up at once when the senate went into committee of the whole. The final outcome was that the original resolution calling for a constitutional amendment was amended to allow women to vote at any and all elections. The Markham bill was taken up and defeated.

ST. PAUL, March 16.—In the senate Mr. Craven presented a bill constituting a state board of immigration and making an appropriation therefor. Most of the business of the day was done out of the regular order. In the reports of committees three or four bills were passed under suspension of the rules. The farmers are growing anxious about the state elevator bill, and Canestorp today succeeded in having it recalled from the committee on finance and placed on general orders. The bill of the legislative reapportionment committee was presented and sent to general orders.

In the house the capitol bill was the question at issue, and oratory, pro and con, on the bill consumed the entire afternoon in the house. When night came to the relief of tired representatives, it came with a quasi victory for the Capital city, and yet with so close a vote that there is not in sight enough votes for the final passage of the bill. The discussion of the day was devoid of any of the sensational features which had been expected, although there was undisguised hostility on the part of the northern contingent led by Mr. Fleming of Crow Wing and Mr. Dunn of Mille Lacs. The bill was amended, limiting entire cost to $2,000,000, and was recommended to pass by a vote of 50 to 43, eight less than the required number to pass the measure.

ST. PAUL, March 17.—The senate committee on education recommended the passage of the house text book bill, and the report was adopted. Lineau's free public employment office bill and Day's game and fish bill were passed; also Dean's bill to require candidates and party committees to file schedules of campaign expenses.

In the afternoon the following bills passed: Amending the probate code; relating to payment of witness fees; relating to new trials; amending law relating to trust deeds; relating to organization of new school districts; pertaining to the filing of plats of cities, towns and villages; to authorize mortgagees to pay taxes and insurance on mortgaged property; extending the time in which corporations may wind up their business; to make the destruction of muskallonge fish a misdemeanor; providing for the vacation of roads remaining unused five years; providing for the distribution of supreme court reports; providing that interest on installment notes on which interest has been deducted from the principal shall not exceed 7 per cent; relating to the estate of deceased persons; amendment to the law relating to deeds; amending the law relating to the incorporation of villages; fixing the terms of office of members of the state board of health; relating to the sentencing of prisoners convicted of felony and their subsequent release on parole.

The house devoted the entire forenoon in talking over the matter of salaries of employes, but in the afternoon passed the following bills: Legalizing acts of state reformatory; relating to the appointment of county assessors; new capitol for Minnesota.

ST. PAUL, March 18.—The house had an absolutely profitless session in the morning hour, and consumed the entire time on a couple of reports from the judiciary committee. It was a bad time for the committee, which was unceremoniously sat upon. There was a reappearance of the Markham bill, in the resurrection of the bill which had been killed by the committee on railroads, to apportion the gross earnings tax among the counties in which the railroad lands are exempted. The railroad committee reported the bill for indefinite postponement, and Mr. Markham had the bill re-committed and referred to the committee on taxes and tax laws, where it should have gone in the first place. The latter committee reported a substitute, which makes the bill all the stronger, and recommended it to pass.

In the senate the bill for incorporation of homes for orphans and abandoned children, which occasioned an acrimonious sectarian debate yesterday, was recalled from the house, it being stated that some senators had been tangled up in the vote. The bill for the redistricting of the judicial districts of the state developed considerable opposition. The house capitol bill was given its first reading and referred to the committee on printing, to be reprinted as amended.

The senate adjourned to Monday, but the house held an afternoon session, but accomplished very

ST. PAUL, March 20.—Almost the entire morning session of the senate was taken up with the discussion of the action of the district court of Ramsey county in the Rhodes matter. The afternoon session was spent in committee of the whole, and several important bills were acted upon. McMillan's bill to require foreigners to complete their naturalization before they can vote, and Erickson's bill to divide the money received from liquor licenses between city and county were recommended for indefinite postponement. McMillan's bill for the regulation of conventions and caucuses, and Wyman's factory inspection bill were passed. Peterson's bill regulating the receipt, storage and shipment of grain in country elevators was considered at length. A substitute was adopted for section 4, making it compulsory to give a receipt for the delivery of stored grain, either at the place of receipt or on track at some terminal point, thus giving the farmer the choice of two markets. The bill was further amended to take effect Aug. 1, 1893, and was then recommended to pass.

In the house it was another day, of the many, in which absolutely nothing was done but speech making, only one solitary bill being agreed to, the Peterson bill to tax inheritances and gifts, which, amended by Mr. Winston's efforts to exempt life insurance, was at the end of a long debate recommended to pass. The whole first half of the day was consumed in the row with the Ramsey county court, and the remainder of the last half, after the Peterson bill was disposed of, was consumed on the Jacobson local option bill, which at the end of over two hours' hot debate was saved from an expected death—expected by both friends and enemies—and at the end of a bad muddle went to the table, where it can be called up at any time by a majority vote.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Astounding Rascality.

The county attorney of Pipestone county has been put in possession of an astounding bundle of evidence, showing conclusively that two men deliberately drove another, a neighboring farmer, into a mad-house in order to gain possession of his farm. The victim is Frank Erhardt, and the evidence shows that the two fiends incarnate worked on him more than 18 months before they landed him, a raving maniac, in the state asylum at St. Peter. Erhardt owned a farm in a particularly favorable location near Chandler, and the two villains in the case attempted, by the use of confederates, to prove to the old man that his farm was haunted. At the dead of night on several occasions they called him from his bed to show him apparitions prowling about the buildings on the farm. Erhardt was almost driven crazy by these alleged spooks, but they did not have the effect of driving him from the farm, the end desired by the covetous rascals engineering the heartless affair. Failing in their efforts, the pair of desperadoes attempted to poison Erhardt and his sister by putting arsenic in the milk and meal. The milk tasted bitter and was thrown out. Bread made from the meal made the victims sick, but it did not contain poison enough to kill. Erhardt was made aware of the conspiracy against him and brooded over the matter till he went stark mad, and was taken to St. Peter. The conspirators against Erhardt have flown, but the sheriff knows where they are, and will apprehend them as soon as the county attorney is ready to act.

The World's Fair.

The Minnesota board of world's fair managers has completed its inspection of the state building at Chicago and has found it eminently satisfactory. With the exception of being repainted later in the season and being ornamented in the interior and exterior to a greater extent than at present, the building will remain as it now is. In the interior decoration wheat will prevail. A new feature of the Minnesota exhibit which has just been announced will consist of three tepees of Chippewas in their native dress and living as nearly as possible like the aborigines when first discovered by the whites. These Indians will be engaged in work peculiar to them, ornament making, and every effort will be made to show them as they were in their savage state. A. B. Latham, having in charge the horticultural exhibit of the state, has gone to Chicago with a carload of material, and will begin at once putting it in place.

Killed His Wife.

Jealousy, and probably whisky, was the cause of a terrible tragedy occurring at Rice River, about four miles from Beaulieu postoffice. The facts as learned of the deplorable affair are that John Sloan, a well-to-do farmer, became involved in a quarrel with his wife and that in the altercation the latter was pounded and strangled to death by her husband. Attempts to keep the matter secret and indications of a hurried burial led to an inquest. This, with the voluntary confession of the husband, revealed the facts as stated. The culprit is now in the custody of Maj. Chas. A. Ruffet awaiting the arrival of the United States marshal.

Killed by Logs.

The circumstances attending the accidental death of Charles McDonald at Gus Sexton's logging camp on Kettle river are most appalling. McDonald was a teamster, and when hauling logs over what is termed the "hill" road it was necessary for a helper to assist the regular teams. The helper met him at the foot of the hill and assisted him to the peak. Here he unhitched his team and proceeded down to the foot. McDonald continued on, and as the sled disappeared on the other side he fell beneath the runner and was instantly killed. He laid there unnoticed until the next team came along, when his remains were picked up. His head was completely severed from the trunk and was a ghastly sight.

Maimed by Machinery.

A terrible accident occurred at the building of the Minnesota Shoe company at St. Paul. Nels Heege was caught in the shafting and cruelly mangled. He is a painter in the employ of Taylor & Craig, and while working around the machinery was caught in the belt and drawn into the shafting. Both of his arms were broken and he was badly bruised about the upper portion of the body and suffered a severe scalp wound. He was taken to the Bethesda hospital, where it was found necessary to amputate one of his arms.

SERIOUS FACTS ABOUT BREAD

Which Housekeepers Should Earnestly Consider.

A serious danger menaces the health of the people of this country in the numerous alum baking powders that are now being urged upon the public.

There is no question as to the detrimental effects of these powders upon the system. Every Board of Health, every physician, will tell you of the unwholesome qualities they add to the food. Some countries have absolutely prohibited the sale of bread containing alum.

Even small doses of alum, given to children, have produced fatal results, while cases of heartburn, indigestion, griping constipation, dyspepsia, and various kindred gastric troubles from irritation of the mucous membrane, caused by the continuous use of food prepared with the alum or alum-phosphate powders, are familiar in the practice of every physician.

It is not possible that any prudent housewife, any loving mother, will knowingly use an article of food that will injure the health of her household, or perhaps cause the death of her children.

How shall the dangerous alum powders be distinguished? And how shall the danger to health from their use be avoided?

Generally, alum powders may be known from the price at which they are sold, or from the fact that they are accompanied by a gift, or are disposed of under some scheme. The alum powder costs but a few cents a pound to make, and is often sold at 20 or 25 cents a pound. If some present is given with it, the price may be 30, 40 or 50 cents a pound.

It is impossible to name all the alum powders in the market, but any baking powder sold at a low price, or advertised as costing only half as much as cream of tartar powders, or accompanied by a present, or disposed of under any scheme, is of this class, detrimental to health, and to be avoided.

But the easy, safe, and certain protection of our bread, biscuit and cake from all danger of unwholesomeness is in the use of the Royal Baking Powder only. This powder is mentioned because of the innumerable reports in its favor by high medical authorities, by the U. S. Government, and by the official chemists and Boards of Health, which leave no doubt as to its entire freedom from alum, lime and ammonia, its absolute purity and wholesomeness. While its use is thus a safeguard against the poisonous alum powders it is satisfactory at the same time to know that it makes the whitest, lightest, sweetest and most delicious food, which will keep moist and fresh longer, and that can be eaten with immunity hot or cold, stale or fresh, and also that owing to its greater strength it is more economical than others.

These facts should incline consumers to turn a deaf ear to all importunities to buy the inferior powders. If a grocer urges the sale of the cheap, impure, alum brands, it should be borne in mind that it is because he can make more profit on them. The wise housekeeper will decline in all cases to take them.

Take no chances through using a doubtful article where so important a matter as the health or life of dear ones is at stake.

INFLUENCE.

I wonder if ever a wave ebbs out but it breaks on a distant shore,
Or fall any tears
But the faces of years
Are stained through the evermore?

I wonder if ever a day is born or an evening to twilight steals,
But they have a mark
Thro' the gathering dark
In the point of their golden wheels?

I wonder if ever a word is said, or even a song is sung,
But their souls live on
When their sounds are gone
In the palace of silence hung?

I wonder if ever a life is lived but its being gives sweet to some,
But its hands touch still
And its dream voice will
Speak after its lips are dumb?

And so it may be, thou forgotten one, when the cup of thy life is filled,
That the world drinks up
From the shattered cup
Whatever and all that is spilled.

THAT NEXT ROOM TENANT.

EDITH STEWART DREWRY.

[Copyright, 1893, by the Author.]

IT WAS the veriest old bachelor that ever wore shoe-leather, was Mr. George Barnet—eccentric, precise, and—oh, so proper! Why, bless you, he wouldn't have taken Mrs. Jones' room at all if she had been youngish and the least good-looking. The first thing he asked her was if she took in ladies. He couldn't dream of taking lodgings there if—

"Oh! dear no, sir," he was promptly assured, with a twinkle of fun in Mrs. Jones' optical organ. "I never take no ladies; they're too troublesome. Mine is only for gentlemen."

On which Mr. Barnet permitted himself to be shown the front parlor and the first-floor back room, let with it for a bedroom. Mrs. Jones marched in, throwing back the coverlet to show that the bedding was spotlessly clean; but her invitation to "Step in, sir, and see for yourself," had the reverse effect, for the old gentleman, who had peeped timidly in, backed out blushing and stammering: "Thank you, ma'am—er—yes, yes; I see, thank you; it's quite nice."

That trying ordeal got through, he faced round on two doors clearly belonging to two front rooms and inquired what they were and who lodged there. Mrs. Jones answered:

"This door, sir, next here, is a sitting-room, and that is the slip-room (a bedroom). A young man has them two rooms—a most quiet-be'aved, respectable young man he is, sir."

"Ah—h'm. I hope so, ma'am, I hope so. I could not remain where my very next neighbor was irregularly conducted, you know."

"Oh, no, sir; but that ain't Mr. Welby. He don't interfere with nobody!"

The old bachelor took the apartments. Before long, being of course ten times more curious than any woman, he soon managed to encounter his next-room neighbor in the passage. He was a dashing-looking young fellow, who stood aside for the old gentleman with a polite "Good morning," —and then ran lightly upstairs.

"By Jove! what a queer old party it is, Mrs. Jones," said he that evening. "Looks to a T the awful piece of propriety you said. Ha! ha!—you didn't tell him what I am?"

"Law, sir—no! He'd fly out of his skin, let alone the house. How are you getting on, sir?" asked the landlady.

"Oh, first-rate, Mrs. Jones. I shall soon have all perfected and I think the entertainment will be a success."

Mr. Barnet was appallingly regular in all he did: the routine of one day was, with the rarest variation, the routine of every day. He was the most-to-be-pitied creature—a bachelor of moderate means and no occupation.

For a whole fortnight Mr. Barnet busied himself trying to find what that next-room tenant did for his living. By dint of a score of devices known to the curious, he discovered that young Welby came in and out at all hours. As all was comparatively quiet in the front room in the evening he fondly took it that the tenant thereof not only "came home to tea," but stayed at home studying till an early bed-time.

"Really, a most properly-conducted young man," said Mr. Barnet to himself one evening at about the end of a fortnight.

Alas for his premature approval; only two evenings later it was somewhat disturbed. He heard young Welby come in alone; but instead of there being only slight movements overhead there was something of a commotion. The table and chairs were moved about. Then the lodger himself walked about noisily and the deep mutterings of his voice penetrated to the puzzled listener below. Good gracious! was he talking to himself, to Mrs. Jones or to whom? Was it possible that any other than Mrs. Jo—No, no; the thought was too awful. It quite took Mr. Barnet's breath. Besides, he would have heard the most fairy-like footstep or rustle of feminine garments, as his door was ajar. It always was, by the by. Why, there was young Welby going out. Yes, the door shut; and what was more, it hadn't opened again to that young man at ten o'clock.

This was really looking serious, and Mr. Barnet pursed his respectable lips as he slowly retired to his dormitory—quite a quarter of an hour late.

"I shall just lie awake and watch," muttered the old gentleman as he got into bed, which was next the thin partition wall. "If that young scamp is going to—ahem—keep all sorts of improper hours—really, anything might happen next, and my character be compromised!"

But Morpheus was not to be so easily eluded, and Mr. Barnet dozed for a solid half hour. He was awakened by a burst of laughter from the sitting-room next his apartment. Mr. Barnet sat up, rubbing his eyes, utterly indignant at such nocturnal orgies. He had indeed actually raised his hand to give an angry knock at the wall, when a sound broke on his ear which made the remaining hairs on his respectable old head stand on end with horror.

A silvery feminine laugh and voice from that next room!

There was no mistake about it; no disordered nightmare or half-waking fancy in the matter. A giddy laugh and a pretty voice, that said saucily and very distinctly:

"My dear fellow, of course I know you are dead gone on my little self, but

"'Oh, my, fie for shame!
What will your wife say—
What will your wife say?'"

This adaptation of an out-of-date music-hall song was sung, and Mr. Barnet fell back on the pillows gasping for breath.

Then came Welby's stifled laugh again and his voice delightedly:

"That's fine, Dottie, my love! What a boom we shall make of the affair at this rate! We'll clew up now, though. I'm tired."

So the selfish scamp didn't even think that his wicked companion might be tired too. Was he going to let her out—see her home?

But in vain the scandalized old gentleman listened for any such indications. All he heard was the sound of a box-lid being shut down. Slipping out of bed to the door, which he softly opened an inch so as to peep, he saw Welby pass quietly out into his very small bedroom and in three minutes he could be heard snoring.

Then that creature in the sitting-room would slip out of the house presently!

"Good Heavens! What a shameful scandal the whole thing is!" gasped poor Mr. Barnet, creeping back to bed. What could he do but speak to Mrs. Jones? And yet, how could he frame words to even allude to such audacious impropriety?

Tap-tap-tap!

"It's ten o'clock, sir," came Mrs. Jones' resonant tones outside the door.

"Eh—ah—no—dear me—yes, I'll be down soon, ma'am," cried Mr. Barnet, starting up in alarm.

Mrs. Jones retreated, giggling, but she looked as solemn as a judge when, later, Mr. Barnet sent for her, and with much stammering got out that she was quite mistaken about his next room neighbor's character. Nothing less than the evidence of his own senses would make him say so, but he had heard last night, "near midnight, ma'am, a girl's voice—yes, it was a music hall girl, Mrs. Jones;" and then the old gentleman told her what he had heard, to his utter scandalization.

Mrs. Jones couldn't believe but Mr. Barnet was mistaken. Mr. Welby was certainly not married, and couldn't be guilty of such improper conduct as having in a lady visitor so late.

"I heard it ma'am, I tell you!" cried Mr. Barnet. "Dottie was her name. Good Heavens! What is that scamp's occupation?"

"Why, sir, he's an entertainer, then—that's all, and must have been re'earsing over by hisself for his new entertainment." She was smiling.

"Good gracious! a play-actor, you mean?" cried the horrified lodger. "That's it, then. By himself, indeed, Mrs. Jones! I heard the woman's very voice and words. It's a scandal, ma'am, and I won't stop."

"Well, sir, I'll just be on the watch to-night on the top landing, and if you hear anything again, step out and call up to me, and we'll see for ourselves," said Mrs. Jones.

To this Mr. Barnet agreed, and Mrs. Jones retired—but up to the first floor lodger's room. If worthy Mr. B. had listened he might have heard peal upon peal of stifled laughter.

* * * * * * *

"Mrs. J-on-es! Come—he-re—quick!" Time, near midnight; the sound, a hard, shocked whisper up those upper stairs. Down came Mrs. Jones to Mr. Barnet, who, also dressed, stood at his door, trembling, scarlet, but triumphant.

"Now, ma'am, will you still believe I was dreaming? Listen yourself at that r-reprobate's door."

"Ha! ha! my dear boy," came the silvery tones of "Dottie" from within.

"I AM THE LEADING LADY."

"I'm such a nice little sweetheart, eh? But I must play lead, you know—never mind the wife. Ta-ra-ra—"

[Welby.] "Bother her—she can't act."

[Dottie, repeating after a slight pause and from the other end of the room.] "Bother her—she can't act."

"There, ma'am," whispered Mr. Barnet; "what do you say now?"

"That we'll see with our own eyes, sir. Hush! he won't hear the door."

She softly opened it wide enough for them to peep in—she over Mr. Barnet's shoulder, perhaps to conceal her face.

Mr. Barnet nearly stiffened where he stood. His worst fears were confirmed.

Welby stood backing the door. The table and chairs were pushed aside, and to and fro the other end of the space was gliding the prettiest, tiniest lady, scarcely four feet high, and richly dressed. She turned slowly each time, waved her tiny hand, said: "I am the leading lady," and glided across, turning again in the same way. It was too much for Mr. Barnet's propriety and morals.

"You barefaced, audacious scamp!" the old bachelor cried, bursting right in, in a blaze of indignation. "How dare you, sir, bring into a decent house such a shameless—"

"Whew!" said Mr. Welby, swinging round with dancing eyes and low bow, "as—the fair Miss Dottie, leading lady of Welby's Troupe of Automatic Phonographic Marionettes!"

THE WORK OF EXPLORERS.

Enormous Labor Involved in Making Fairly Good Maps of New Countries.

Few people who look at the maps of newly-explored countries know the enormous work done by explorers before the regions can be fairly well mapped. The cartographic material Dr. Stuhlmann has just sent to Europe was collected on his journey from Zanzibar to Victoria Nyanza and northwest to Lake Albert Edward and the region west of Albert Nyanza. The material he sends home shows the work he did for the maps in a year and a half.

The material includes a route map filling one hundred and forty-six octavo sheets. Every five minutes the direction of the line of march was noted, and during the journey many thousand compass bearings were taken to distant mountains and other conspicuous objects. One hundred and five octavo pages are filled with profiles of hill slopes and of the country generally. Another manuscript volume contains a transcript of the geodetic measurements about Bukoba, the German station on the west coast of Victoria Nyanza. Two other journals are filled with the route survey of Dr. Stuhlmann's journey from Bagamoyo, on the Indian ocean, to Victoria Nyanza. Every minute of marching time occupies a millimeter on the map, which fills forty-six sheets, with a total length when put together of forty feet.

This route survey is accompanied by thirteen tables showing mountain profiles and many sketch maps drawn on the spot, giving facts on a larger scale for special regions. Then there is a large folio volume giving all the estimates of height, meteorological observations, and so on, extending to about seventy thousand separate entries. Besides all this cartographic material the explorer sent home large collections of natural history specimens, voluminous notes on the people he met, and vocabularies of twenty different languages. After all these data are in the hands of the geographers and cartographers at home, careful collations and laborious calculations are required before a correct map can be constructed. It is not surprising, then, that years elapse before a book of geographical travel can be presented to the public.

Some route maps in Africa are carried out with a considerable degree of refinement, like that of Dr. Hans Meyer, between Mombasa and Kilima-Njaro. Many others are detailed with less accuracy, but they still approximately define the position of many places and give much information as to the topographic features, geologic formation and character of the soil and vegetation. When such surveys are multiplied by scores every year, grid-ironing the country in many directions, it is easy to see that the geographer who is able to use all his original material to the best advantage must be a specialist in African geography.

In the rush of African discovery during recent years, the cartographers have found it very difficult to keep their maps abreast of information. They have had not only to record new discoveries, but fresh surveys of old discoveries have time and again supplanted the earlier surveys. For instance, we are now depending for our mapping of the southwest coast of Victoria Nyanza upon the survey of Father Schynse made early in 1891. Since then, however, Dr. Stuhlmann, more adequately equipped with instruments than Father Schynse, has made a survey and reports that in some respects Schynse's delineation of the coast is quite inaccurate. There is no doubt that the Stuhlmann delineation of this part of Victoria Nyanza will supplant the Schynse survey.

Men like Ravenstein, in England, and Habenicht, Andree and Luddecke in Germany have made their names particularly well known in the field of African cartography. The practice of the best German atlas makers, who issue fresh atlas sheets whenever geographical news of importance is received, has been a great boon to students of Africa, many of whom keep their atlases unbound that they may replace old sheets with new additions as fast as issued.—N. ILLUSTRATING HISTORY.

Origin of the Process Now Called "Grangerizing."

Rev. Mr. Granger was a clergyman of the last century who wrote an enormous history of England, in which he was careful to make allusion to every celebrated person and place connected with English chronicle. "Grangerizing" has since become the term used to signify the process of illustrating any work of such a character. The late Mr. John Forster "Grangerized" two copies of "Granger," one in fourteen folio volumes, the other in seventeen. Together they contain between 5,000 and 6,000 portraits. Many of these are singularly rare and costly, and might count as originals.

Mr. Sutherland got hold of a prodigious Clarendon and Burnet, and made it the richest and most extensive pictorial history in existence or ever likely to be in existence. He found nearly 19,000 prints and drawings for it, and no less than 731 portraits of Charles I., 518 of Charles II., 352 of Cromwell, 273 of James II. and 420 of William III. If, remarks Mr. Percy Fitzgerald, we only think how few are the portraits of Charles I. and these mostly copies after Vandyke, we shall have an idea of the labor and exploration necessary to gather up the 731. Think also of the pains and cost in cleaning, "laying down," "insetting" and "inlaying" these portraits, the binding, arranging, etc., and we shall not be surprised to learn that this folly occupied the fanatical Sutherland such a lengthy portion of his life. When finished it filled sixty-seven huge volumes and had cost £12,000! We may conceive all the visitings of print shops, the turning over boxes of prints, the groveling among wynds and lanes, the correspondence and the endless paying of money! To give a finish to his labors, a catalogue was prepared of all the engravings. This filled two great quartos. At Sutherland's death the work was carried on by his widow, who is reported to have given as much as £80 for a single plate! —Temple Bar.

Pine-trees on Volcanoes.

Every one who admires trees must be interested in the result of Prof. Heilprin's studies of the pines that clothe the slopes of the great volcanic mountains in Mexico. These huge peaks seem to have pierced their way upward though a mantle of pine forest, which clings to their sides up to a height of nearly three miles and three-quarters. The vertical range of the pine in Mexico is remarkable. It is found among the sustaining palm-trees at the foot of the mountains, and it stands defiant of the cold close to the perpetual snow that cover their summits.—Youth's Companion.

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.

INFLUENCE.

I wonder if ever a wave ebbs out but it breaks on a distant shore,
Or fall any tears
But the faces of years
Are stained through the evermore?

I wonder if ever a day is born or an evening to twilight steals,
But they have a mark
Thro' the gathering dark
In the point of their golden wheels?

I wonder if ever a word is said, or even a song is sung,
But their souls live on
When their sounds are gone
In the palace of silence hung?

I wonder if ever a life is lived but its being gives sweet to some,
But its hands touch still
And its dream voice will
Speak after its lips are dumb?

And so it may be, thou forgotten one, when the cup of the life is filled,
That the world drinks up
From the shattered cup
Whatever and all that is spilled.

THAT NEXT ROOM TENANT.

EDITH STEWART DREWRY.

[Copyright, 1893, by the Author.]

HE WAS the veriest old bachelor that ever wore shoe-leather, was Mr. George Barnet—eccentric, precise, and—oh, so proper! Why, bless you, he wouldn't have taken Mrs. Jones' room at all if she had been youngish and the least good-looking. The first thing he asked her was if she took in ladies. He couldn't dream of taking lodgings there if—

"Oh! dear no, sir," he was promptly assured, with a twinkle of fun in Mrs. Jones' optical organ. "I never take no ladies; they're too troublesome. Mine is only for gentlemen."

On which Mr. Barnet permitted himself to be shown the front parlor and the first-floor back room, let with it for a bedroom. Mrs. Jones marched in, throwing back the coverlet to show that the bedding was spotlessly clean; but her invitation to "Step in, sir, and see for yourself," had the reverse effect, for the old gentleman, who had peeped timidly in, backed out blushing and stammering: "Thank you, ma'am—er—yes, yes; I see, thank you; it's quite nice."

That trying ordeal got through, he faced round on two doors clearly belonging to two front rooms and inquired what they were and who lodged there. Mrs. Jones answered:

"This door, sir, next here, is a sitting-room, and that is the slip-room (a bedroom). A young man has them two rooms—a most quiet-be'aved, respectable young man he is, sir."

"Ah—h'm. I hope so, ma'am, I hope so. I could not remain where my very next neighbor was irregularly conducted, you know."

"Oh, no, sir; but that ain't Mr. Welby. He don't interfere with nobody!"

The old bachelor took the apartments. Before long, being of course ten times more curious than any woman, he soon managed to encounter his next-room neighbor in the passage. He was a dashing-looking young fellow, who stood aside for the old gentleman with a polite "Good morning," —and then ran lightly upstairs.

"By Jove! what a queer old party it is, Mrs. Jones," said he that evening. "Looks to a T the awful piece of propriety you said. Ha! ha!—you didn't tell him what I am?"

"Law, sir—no! He'd fly out of his skin, let alone the house. How are you getting on, sir?" asked the landlady.

"Oh, first-rate, Mrs. Jones. I shall soon have all perfected and I think the entertainment will be a success."

Mr. Barnet was appallingly regular in all he did; the routine of one day was, with the rarest variation, the routine of every day. He was the most-to-be-pitied creature—a bachelor of moderate means and no occupation.

For a whole fortnight Mr. Barnet busied himself trying to find what that next-room tenant did for his living. By dint of a score of devices known to the curious, he discovered that young Welby came in and out at all hours. As all was comparatively quiet in the front room in the evening he fondly took it that the tenant thereof not only "came home to tea," but stayed at home studying till an early bed-time.

"Really, a most properly-conducted young man," said Mr. Barnet to himself one evening at about the end of a fortnight.

Alas for his premature approval; only two evenings later it was somewhat disturbed. He heard young Welby come in alone; but instead of there being only slight movements overhead there was something of a commotion. The table and chairs were moved about. Then the lodger himself walked about noisily and the deep mutterings of his voice penetrated to the puzzled listener below. Good gracious! was he talking to himself, to Mrs. Jones or to whom? Was it possible that any other than Mrs. Jo—No, no; the thought was too awful. It quite took Mr. Barnet's breath. Besides, he would have heard the most fairy-like footstep or rustle of feminine garments, as his door was ajar. It always was, by the by. Why, there was young Welby going out. Yes, the door shut; and what was more, it hadn't opened again to that young man at ten o'clock.

This was really looking serious, and Mr. Barnet pursed his respectable lips as he slowly retired to his dormitory—quite a quarter of an hour late.

"I shall just lie awake and watch," muttered the old gentleman as he got into bed, which was next the thin partition wall. "If that young scamp is going to—ahem—keep all sorts of improper hours—really, anything might happen next, and my character be compromised!"

But Morpheus was not to be so easily eluded, and Mr. Barnet dozed for a solid half hour. He was awakened by a burst of laughter from the sitting-room next his apartment. Mr. Barnet sat up, rubbing his eyes, utterly indignant at such nocturnal orgies. He had indeed actually raised his hand to give an angry knock at the wall, when a sound broke on his ear which made the remaining hairs on his respectable old head stand on end with horror.

A silvery feminine laugh and voice from that next room!

There was no mistake about it; no disordered nightmare or half-waking fancy in the matter. A giddy laugh and a pretty voice, that said saucily and very distinctly:

"My dear fellow, of course I know you are dead gone on my little self, but

"'Oh, my, fie for shame!
What will your wife say—
What will your wife say?'"

This adaptation of an out-of-date music-hall song was sung, and Mr. Barnet fell back on the pillows gasping for breath.

Then came Welby's stifled laugh again and his voice delightedly:

"That's fine, Dottie, my love! What a boom we shall make of the affair at this rate! We'll clew up now, though. I'm tired."

So the selfish scamp didn't even think that his wicked companion might be tired too. Was he going to let her out—see her home?

But in vain the scandalized old gentleman listened for any such indications. All he heard was the sound of a box-lid being shut down. Slipping out of bed to the door, which he softly opened an inch so as to peep, he saw Welby pass quietly out into his very small bedroom and in three minutes he could be heard snoring.

Then that creature in the sitting-room would slip out of the house presently!

"Good Heavens! What a shameful scandal the whole thing is!" gasped poor Mr. Barnet, creeping back to bed. What could he do but speak to Mrs. Jones? And yet, how could he frame words to even allude to such audacious impropriety?

Tap-tap-tap!

"It's ten o'clock, sir," came Mrs. Jones' resonant tones outside the door.

"Eh—ah—no—dear me—yes, I'll be down soon, ma'am," cried Mr. Barnet, starting up in alarm.

Mrs. Jones retreated, giggling, but she looked as solemn as a judge when, later, Mr. Barnet sent for her, and with much stammering got out that she was quite mistaken about his next room neighbor's character. Nothing less than the evidence of his own senses would make him say so, but he had heard last night, "near midnight, ma'am, a girl's voice—yes, it was a music hall girl, Mrs. Jones;" and then the old gentleman told her what he had heard, to his utter scandalization.

Mrs. Jones couldn't believe but Mr. Barnet was mistaken. Mr. Welby was certainly not married, and couldn't be guilty of such improper conduct as having in a lady visitor so late.

"I heard it ma'am, I tell you!" cried Mr. Barnet. "Dottie was her name. Good Heavens! What is that scamp's occupation?"

"Why, sir, he's an entertainer, then—that's all, and must have been re'earsing over by hisself for his new entertainment." She was smiling.

"Good gracious! a play-actor, you mean?" cried the horrified lodger. "That's it, then. By himself, indeed, Mrs. Jones! I heard the woman's very voice and words. It's a scandal, ma'am, and I won't stop."

"Well, sir, I'll just be on the watch to-night on the top landing, and if you hear anything again, step out and call up to me, and we'll see for ourselves," said Mrs. Jones.

To this Mr. Barnet agreed, and Mrs. Jones retired—but up to the first floor lodger's room. If worthy Mr. B. had listened he might have heard peal upon peal of stifled laughter.

* * * * * * *

"Mrs. J-on-es! Come—he-re—quick!" Time, near midnight; the sound, a hard, shocked whisper up those upper stairs. Down came Mrs. Jones to Mr. Barnet, who, also dressed, stood at his door, trembling, scarlet, but triumphant.

"Now, ma'am, will you still believe I was dreaming? Listen yourself at that r-reprobate's door."

"Ha! ha! my dear boy," came the silvery tones of "Dottie" from within.

"I AM THE LEADING LADY."

"I'm such a nice little sweetheart, eh? But I must play lead, you know—never mind the wife. Ta-ra-ra—"

[Welby.] "Bother her—she can't act."

[Dottie, repeating after a slight pause and from the other end of the room.] "Bother her—she can't act."

"There, ma'am," whispered Mr. Barnet; "what do you say now?"

"That we'll see with our own eyes, sir. Hush! he won't hear the door."

She softly opened it wide enough for them to peep in—she over Mr. Barnet's shoulder, perhaps to conceal her face.

Mr. Barnet nearly stiffened where he stood. His worst fears were confirmed.

Welby stood backing the door. The table and chairs were pushed aside, and to and fro the other end of the space was gliding the prettiest, tiniest lady, scarcely four feet high, and richly dressed. She turned slowly each time, waved her tiny hand, said: "I am the leading lady," and glided across, turning again in the same way. It was too much for Mr. Barnet's propriety and morals.

"You barefaced, audacious scamp!" the old bachelor cried, bursting right in, in a blaze of indignation. "How dare you, sir, bring into a decent house such a shameless—"

"Whew!" said Mr. Welby, swinging round with dancing eyes and low bow, "as—the fair Miss Dottie, leading lady of Welby's Troupe of Automatic Phonographic Marionettes!"

Table au! and collapse of Mr. George Barnet.

THE WORK OF EXPLORERS.

Enormous Labor Involved in Making Fairly Good Maps of New Countries.

Few people who look at the maps of newly-explored countries know the enormous work done by explorers before the regions can be fairly well mapped. The cartographic material Dr. Stuhlmann has just sent to Europe was collected on his journey from Zanzibar to Victoria Nyanza and northwest to Lake Albert Edward and the region west of Albert Nyanza. The material he sends home shows the work he did for the maps in a year and a half.

The material includes a route map filling one hundred and forty-six octavo sheets. Every five minutes the direction of the line of march was noted, and during the journey many thousand compass bearings were taken to distant mountains and other conspicuous objects. One hundred and five octavo pages are filled with profiles of hill slopes and of the country generally. Another manuscript volume contains a transcript of the geodetic measurements about Bukoba, the German station on the west coast of Victoria Nyanza. Two other journals are filled with the route survey of Dr. Stuhlmann's journey from Bagamoyo, on the Indian ocean, to Victoria Nyanza. Every minute of marching time occupies a millimeter on the map, which fills forty-six sheets, with a total length when put together of forty feet.

This route survey is accompanied by thirteen tables showing mountain profiles and many sketch maps drawn on the spot, giving facts on a larger scale for special regions. Then there is a large folio volume giving all the estimates of height, meteorological observations, and so on, extending to about seventy thousand separate entries. Besides all this cartographic material the explorer sent home large collections of natural history specimens, voluminous notes on the people he met, and vocabularies of twenty different languages. After all these data are in the hands of the geographers and cartographers at home, careful collations and laborious calculations are required before a correct map can be constructed. It is not surprising, then, that years elapse before a book of geographical travel can be presented to the public.

Some route maps in Africa are carried out with a considerable degree of refinement, like that of Dr. Hans Meyer, between Mombasa and Kilima-Njaro. Many others are detailed with less accuracy, but they still approximately define the position of many places and give much information as to the topographic features, geologic formation and character of the soil and vegetation. When such surveys are multiplied by scores every year, grid-ironing the country in many directions, it is easy to see that the geographer who is able to use all his original material to the best advantage must be a specialist in African geography.

In the rush of African discovery during recent years, the cartographers have found it very difficult to keep their maps abreast of information. They have had not only to record new discoveries, but fresh surveys of old discoveries have time and again supplanted the earlier surveys. For instance, we are now depending for our mapping of the southwest coast of Victoria Nyanza upon the survey of Father Schynse made early in 1891. Since then, however, Dr. Stuhlmann, more adequately equipped with instruments than Father Schynse, has made a survey and reports that in some respects Schynse's delineation of the coast is quite inaccurate. There is no doubt that the Stuhlmann delineation of this part of Victoria Nyanza will supplant the Schynse survey.

Men like Ravenstein, in England, and Habenicht, Andree and Luddecke in Germany have made their names particularly well known in the field of African cartography. The practice of the best German atlas makers, who issue fresh atlas sheets whenever geographical news of importance is received, has been a great boon to students of Africa, many of whom keep their atlases unbound that they may replace old sheets with new additions as fast as issued.—N. ILLUSTRATING HISTORY.

Origin of the Process Now Called "Grangerizing."

Rev. Mr. Granger was a clergyman of the last century who wrote an enormous history of England, in which he was careful to make allusion to every celebrated person and place connected with English chronicle. "Grangerizing" has since become the term used to signify the process of illustrating any work of such a character. The late Mr. John Forster "Grangerized" two copies of "Granger," one in fourteen folio volumes, the other in seventeen. Together they contain between 5,000 and 6,000 portraits. Many of these are singularly rare and costly, and might count as originals.

Mr. Sutherland got hold of a prodigious Clarendon and Burnet, and made it the richest and most extensive pictorial history in existence or ever likely to be in existence. He found nearly 10,000 prints and drawings for it, and no less than 731 portraits of Charles I., 518 of Charles II., 352 of Cromwell, 273 of James II. and 420 of William III. If, remarks Mr. Percy Fitzgerald, we only think how few are the portraits of Charles I, and these mostly copies after Vandyke, we shall have an idea of the labor and exploration necessary to gather up the 731. Think also of the pains and cost in cleaning, "laying down," "insetting" and "inlaying" these portraits, the binding, arranging, etc., and we shall not be surprised to learn that this folly occupied the fanatical Sutherland such a lengthy portion of his life. When finished it filled sixty-seven huge volumes and had cost £12,000! We may conceive all the visitings of print shops, the turning over boxes of prints, the groveling among wynds and lanes, the correspondence and the endless paying of money! To give a finish to his labors, a catalogue was prepared of all the engravings. This filled two great quartos. At Sutherland's death the work was carried on by his widow, who is reported to have given as much as £80 for a single plate! —Temple Bar.

Pine-trees on Volcanoes.

Every one who admires trees must be interested in the result of Prof. Heilbrin's studies of the pines that clothe the slopes of the great volcanic mountains in Mexico. These huge peaks seem to have pierced their way upward though a mantle of pine forest, which clings to their sides up to a height of nearly three miles and three-quarters. The vertical range of the pine in Mexico is remarkable. It is found among the sunloving palm-trees at the foot of the mountains, and it stands defiant of the cold close to the perpetual snow that cover their summits.—Youth's Companion.

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.

Yours heartily,

"Shave your Soap"—so the soap makers say, especially if your washing delicate things. Now, in the name of common sense, what's the use? When you can get Pearline, in powder form for this very reason, why do you want to work over soap, which, if it's good for anything, gets very hard and difficult to cut. Besides, Pearline is vastly better than any powdered soap could be. It has all the good properties of any soap—and many more, too. There's something in it that does the work easily, but without harm—much more easily than any other way yet known.

Swan Erickson is the architect and Charley Carleton has the plans in his possession and is at work on the frames, preparatory to an early start on the structure as soon as old Borias looses his grasp on all nature.

—The Eagle in her "Rambling Remarks" assails the school children for opposing woman suffrage. Who knows better than children a woman's sphere? She also goes for the Principal for assigning such a subject for essays, and that, after saying that "Woman suffrage is one of the most vital questions before legislators all over the country. Be consistent Rambler.

—On Saturday evening at about 8 o'clock the fire alarm was sounded bringing out the fire companies and most of the citizens, soon to learn that the bright light and volumes of smoke came from the feed mill of Adam Horsch, which stood on the west side near the bridge. The fire engine was run down onto the ice where many willing hands endeavored to force a stream of water but which attempts were of no avail, and the flames grew higher and higher and the crowds of people grew larger and larger. Finally the frame fell in. And the mill together with quite an amount of grain mostly belonging to farmers was consumed by the fire.

A Ghost Story.

Old Gutzy says that at the last Democratic caucus I voted for myself for town clerk. People, by this time, must be aware that I am a sort of an extraordinary person, but that I voted for myself when I did not attend the caucus looks like a ghost story. A lie nailed. W. Z.

We Prove His Case.

Old Gutzy asserts that my relative Kenning built the Samsel, Ruckholdt and McKinley bridges. The first two bridges were not built during my administration of county offices and the McKinley bridge is good for 15 years more, but what of it? Kenning also superintended the building of the Delano school house while Old Gutzy was a trustee of the district, (by the way under what law did you buy that old school house as trustee from the trustees, old Gutyz?) and if old Gutzy wants to prove by this that Kenning's jobs were no good, in the case of the Delano school house, old Gutzy at least for once hit the nail on the head.

I think Mr. Editor, this is enough for this week, I promise more hereafter with your permission.

W. ZIEBARTH

He Waddles into the Trap.

For the last 15 years old Gutzy has mixed me, up with anything bad (according to his idea) in the county affairs. He ALWAYS addressed himself only to me, but when two weeks ago, I, on purpose used the expression "I built the Rockford bridge," for once he finds, I assume too much, that the board consisted of five members. Now I used that expression just for the purpose of catching him, and sure enough, he as easy as the little striped quadruped waddles into the trap.

He also talks about "oil" being used in the Dayton bridge. Now if he knows of any oil being used aside from some he may have received himself let's hear from him, don't be bashful, give it all. The reason I did not mention the Dayton bridge was that it is not similar to any other bridge we built, as it needed a stone pier and abuttment on our side of the river on account of a high sandy river bank. Also if he knows of an extra being paid out, give the amounts and what for, or shut up your lying insinuations.

W. ZIEBARTH.

Protection's Inhumanity.

A poorly dressed woman bought five cents worth of potatoes at an East Seventh grocery. She was given three pounds. This is at the rate of $1 a bushel. The market price in quantities is 75 cents a bushel. The grocer said that many bought only by the nickel's worth. Poverty must be very pressing in these cases. Can inhumanity go farther than when it diminishes the quantity people so poor can buy for their nickels? And what shall we call it when it cloaks itself under the mantle of brotherly regard for the welfare of all, and especially for those who labor? Isn't it devilish then?

Save in short crop years we grow all the potatoes we can eat. In some years they are hauled out of the cellars in the spring and thrown away. At such times you can't give them away. Last year's was a short crop. We have called on other countries for a supply. We bought abroad and imported in January 384,000 bushels. About the same in December. We paid for them where we bought them about 45 cents a bushel. We paid the freight on them. Then we paid the United States for the blessed privilege of bringing in potatoes for our people to eat 25 cents more for each bushel: more than half what the foreigner asked us for them; 58 per cent of their value. The foreigner didn't pay that tax; it was added to cost and made the price. It made every poor woman get less potatoes for her nickel.

Why this useless and onerous tax that yields revenue only in times of scarcity and want and none in times of plenty? That only helps to lessen the number of potatoes that can go to the dinner tables of the poor. It is one of the most pitiful of stories; pitiful and shameful.

It was the bribe of a Republican congress to the farmers of the nation for their votes; greed of office dickering with greed for pelf. It was a sop to growling Cerberus just wakening to a sense of being defrauded and fooled.

The bribe was rejected, but the tax remains to add to the cost of every meal eaten by everybody of which potatoes form a part, a daily evidence of "man's inhumanity to man." And every struggling brother, striving hard to make daily wage provide daily bread, should teach his children at their frugal board to add to the grace the words: "God forgive them; they knew not what they did."—St. Paul Globe.

CORRESPONDENCE

ROCKFORD RECORD.

Winter lingers in the lap of spring and is apparently with us for a few more weeks.

There were over twenty couple gathered at the G. A. R. hall, Friday evening, to celebrate St. Patrick's day, and tripped the light fantastic to the sweet strains of the music until the wee sma' hours of the morning. A sumptuous supper was served in the lower hall by the W. R. C. which gives great credit to that organization. It was a grand success in every way and every one enjoyed it. Roberts and Darrow know how to make a dance a success.

Wm. Sleigh aspirant for the postoffice, has circulated a petition among the people of this vicinity and has a large number of signers. His chances are good as he has it all his own way, no one as yet having tried for the office.

If that gentleman, of Maple Plain would look over some of his correspondence for the past year he would undoubtedly find many conflicting remarks—about the time Mr. Lewis was elected he was in his favor and spoke well of Mr. Shaver but something untold has happened. It is apparent that Mr. Shaver is the choice of all the teachers in Hennepin county except the gentleman from Maple Plain. If Mr. Shaver is well able to work at other work than assistant superintendent or school teaching, Mr. K. is undoubtedly as well able to work at other business. Mr. Shaver has given entire satisfaction in the most of the county. How long has that gentleman been aware that Mr. J. A. Lewis was a physical wreck when he ran for office.

Maj R. H. Hendershot, "The Drummer boy of the Rappahannock" and his son, J. C. Hendershot give an entertainment in the G. A. R. hall, this (Wednesday) evening.

Mr. and Mrs. D D. Ames' little child is very sick. Dr. Shrader was called Monday.

F. H. Wooden has concluded to leave us soon. He is contemplating a trip to Texas.

Mr. Hatch, of Clear Lake, arrived this morning to take charge of and operate the creamery here in Mr. Woodin's place.

The school children are practicing for an entertainment which will take place in a few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Twombly were pleasantly surprised by their many friends last Friday evening. It being the fifteenth anniversary of their marriage. A pleasant evening was spent and all joined in wishing them many more wedding anniversaries.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

THE SILVER BIRDSNEST.

(SELECTED.)

A stranded soldiers epaulet
The waters cast ashore,
A little winged rover met,
And eyed it oe'r and oe'r,
The silver bright, so pleased her sight,
On that lone idle vest,
She knew not why she should deny,
Herself a silver nest.

The shining wire she picked and twirled it,
Then bore it to her bough;
Where, on a flowery twig, she curled it,
The bird can show you how,
But when enough, of that bright stuff,
The cunning builder bore,
Her house to make, she would not take,
Nor did she covet, more.

But when the little artesan,
With neither pride, nor guilt,
Had entered in her pretty plan,
Her resting place had built,
With here, and there, a plume, to spare,
About her own light form;
Of these, inlaid, with skill, she made,
A lining, soft, and warm.

But do you think the tender brood,
She fondled there, and fed,
Were prouder, when they understood
The sheen about their bed,
Do you suppose they ever rose,
Of higher powers possessed;
Because they knew they peeped and grew,
Within a silver nest.

FROM the Louisville Courier Journal we clip the following from the Chicago Times:

"The plant of the Carnegie Steel Company at Homestead, Pa., is increasing its capacity by one-half. This is one of the plants that was listed by the Republican papers to be closed if Mr. Cleveland was elected.

LEWIS BAKER Editor of the St. Paul Globe, has received the appointment of Minister to Nicaragua, Costa Rica and San Salyador. Salary $10,000.00. This appointment seems to be satisfactory to the rank and file of Minnesota Democracy.

THE United States now enjoys the proud distinction of having her flag float over the fastest armored vessel in the world. The New York, costing $3,000,000 and which lately had her trial trip developed a speed of over 20 knots per hour.

SUNDAY, April 2, will be Easter. The observance of this day is in commemoration of the resurection of Christ from the tomb. It is a religious festival and is kept by holding services and by making presents of colored eggs, pictures, etc., etc. Easter comes on the first Sunday after the full moon which happens upon, or next after, March 21, and may come as early as March 22 or as late as April 25. This year we have an early Easter.

THE latest advices from Washington are to the effect that President Cleveland will call an extra session of Congress in September, when a carefully prepared tariff bill will be passed and the Sherman silver bill repealed. This suits the people who elected him for the purpose of making these needed reforms. There is no use waiting until his term of office expires for these desirable reforms. It is best to make them soon as possible and if they are not exactly right in the first instance they can soon be rectifield while their friends have the power to do so.

THE country is being flooded with anti-Catholic literature of every description now-a-days, and people are asked to believe that in the near future all the horrors of St. Bortholomew's day will be repeated in our midst. If there is any truth for these fears measures should at once be set on foot to prevent such an occurrence. If it is merely political clap-trap, gotten up for the purpose of consolidating people not members of that church for political power, that should be found out and exposed, so that people may not be led into voting into office men who believe in using such arguments and means of working on the fears of the people for their own selfish purposes. This country has for four hundred years been big enough for all people, until recently, when Chinese have been excluded, and there is plenty of land and plenty to keep everybody busy minding their own business and serving God according to the dictates of their own consciences while they do not interfere with the rights of their neighbors for the next four centuries so far as shows on the surface. If there is any thing beneath the surface the sooner it is exposed to the gaze of all the better.

THAT is a pretty state of affairs when a member of the law-making body of the state tries to intimidate voters into voting against a measure because the govornor has threatened not to sign it.

MINNESOTA Democrats are growing restless over waiting for the President to appoint some of them to fat offices. Perhaps Old Grover is waiting for them to get a Democratic majority in the State first.

ONE of the worst wheat combines ever known has been exciting the average Chicagoian this week. In St. Paul it is different, I. Donnelly and his committee have been exciting the coal combine, terribly.

Tariff Pictures.

The new tariff has increased the number of tobacco growers in New England from 3,393
in 1801 to 4,713
in 1892, and the production of tobacco from 15,716,600 pounds to 23,315,225

pounds. The price of tobacco has doubled since the McKinley law took effect.—New York Press.

Does the Press wish to convey to the minds of western people that the increase in the number of tobacco growers is an advantage to the country? Do they mean to insinuate that anyone is benefitted by having more of the vile and polluting weed raised in this country? And if the western farmer must have his tobacco to chew or smoke, of what advantage to him, is it, that the price has raised to double what it was before the McKinley bill went into effect?

HON. CORNELIUS WILLIAMS, M. D., of Ramsey, is one of the hard working members of the Legislature this winter. He has an eye out for the health of himself and his associates, as the resolution he succeeded in having passed the other day, requiring the janitor to remove the storm-sash from the capitol, would indicate. He does not forget his constituency either and has a bill for establishing a park of 600 acres, between the cities, before the house. When the cities become one, and are densely populated the inhabitants will doubtless remember the Dr. as a benefactor to his race for this kindness shown toward them. He will, also, be greatfully remembered by the next generation of boys who will be strong and hardy and who will not fear to come before a board of examiners for a cadetship to West Point because they indulge in the deadly cigarette if he succeeds in having his bill making a license of $900. for the privilege of selling cigarettes, made a law. The Hon. Dr. also has several other important bills before the house, and takes a lively interest in all that goes on before that august assemblage even to abstruse law questions, and rights of courts and legislators, and aids in every way possible in maintaining the dignity of Minnesota's law making body.

HON. JOHN BOYLAN, of Carver county, has introduced into the legislature a very important bill. One that should, in the interests of humanity, beome a law. And which would do away with one source of enriching a few individuals at the expense of a gullible public. It is an act to regulate the sale of Patent medicines. Section 1, requires the seller to have the complete formula of the medicine on the bottle or package. Section 2, makes it a misdemeanor not to comply with this law. Setion 3, forbids the publication on the package of anything that is false, in any material respect, and makes the violation of the law a misdmeanor. The penalty for violating this law is to be imprisonment in the county jail for not to exceed one year or a fine not to exceed three hundred dollars, for each offense or by both fine and imprisonment. Some of the cheaper newspapers who depend largely on advertisements of nostrums and patent medicines for their support are opposing this bill. But the bill is as much in the interests of the public as anything that has recently come up. If the formula is given people can buy for themselves, the principal ingredient of many patent medicines at a very great saving to their pocket-books, of course the manufacturers and those handling the goods will be more or less discommoded in their business, but the average sick person will stand a much better chance of recovering than he will under the present style of pouring down bottles of patent medicines, not knowing what they contain, for every ailment from gout, to consumption, and which claims to cure all, and often prevents the patient from securing needed medical aid until it is too late to be of service. Put the formula on the medicine, and print no more stories about a sure cure for incurable disease.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 24, 1893.

President Cleveland has done no more popular thing since he assumed his high office than when he "jumped upon," to use a bit of expressive slang, the head of the slimy serpent, nepotism, which had started to wriggling around entirely too promiscuously. He first took occasion to inform a distinguished southern Senator who had appointed his son to be clerk of the Senate committee of which he was lately made chairman, that in consequence of his appointment, indicating a desire to look out for his personal and family interests first of all, his recommendations had been much weakened.

Next, he took a western Congressman's breath away, when as a clinching argument in favor of the appointment to an office of one of his constituents he said: "And he is a relative of yours, Mr. President," by saying: "That settles it. No relative of mine shall be appointed to office by me," He then gave that Congressman a short but comprehensive lesson on the evils of nepotism, which it is safe to say he will never forget if he lives a century. It is also safe to say that the head of the slimy serpent will not be reared in any of the executive departments of the government for four years to come, all of which is a decided gain for the country.

The executive departments are being put upon a democratic basis as rapidly as possible, and republican chiefs of bureaux and divisions are being succeeded by democrats as fast as the heads of the departments can select the new officials. Democratic economy is also being put into practical operation. Following Secretary Morton's order dismissing all of the superfluous employes of the department of Agriculture, came an order from Secretary Carlisle to the division chiefs of the Treasury department, ordering the immediate dismissal of every employe not absolutely essential to keep up the work of the department. The democratic administration was voted into power to reduce the extravagant expenditures of the Goyernment, and every member of it is fully determined that the wishes of the voters shall be carried out to the letter.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Maxwell, the gentleman who will wield the axe made famous by Vice President Stevenson, is on deck and already hard at work. There are several thousand resignations of fourth-class postmasters on hand, and these will be disposed of before he begins the work of removing republican postmasters.

Speaking of postmasterters, P. M. G. Bissell stated to a delegation of Missouri Congressman that the policy of the department concerning appointments had been misrepresented by a certain class of newspapers. In the first place. it had been stated by these newspapers that the recommendation of Congressmen would count for nothing. As a refutation of that statement the fact was pointed out that not a single postmaster had yet been appointed who did not have the endorsement of his Congressman. While not disposed to ignore the Congressmen, Mr. Bissell said that the question of who should be postmaster should, in a measure at least, be decided by the people of the locality, who were more directly interested than anyone else, and that the wishes of the people when expressed, would certainly be considered in making the appointments. Nobody is to be ignored; what the department wants is the co operation of both the people and the Congressmen in the selection of such postmasters as will increase the efficiency of the postal service. Mr. Bissell also denounced as false the statements that women and editors are to be discriminated against in the selection of postmasters.

The number of nominations sent to the Senate this week is considerably ahead of any other single week. There have necessarily been some personal disappointments, but with the exception of the nominations of Burke and Hawkins to be U. S. Attorney and Marshal for Indiana, over which there was a little flurry, no adverse criticisms have been made of any of them by democrats.

The democratic caucus decided to elect the officers of the Senate at the present extra session, and nominated ex-Congressman E. M. R. Cox, of North Carolina, for Secretary; Richard J. Bright, of Indiana, for Sergeant-at-Arms, and Rev. W. H. Milburn, the blind preacher who has been Chaplain of the House for several terms, for Chaplain. The republicans threaten to resort to filibustering to prevent an election of these officers, but it is believed that they are only making a bluff to enable them to keep as many republicans in the subordinate positions as possible.

Senator Harris, of Tennessee, has been elected president pro-tempore of the senate, but as Vice President Stevenson gives evidence of his intention to stick more closely to his duties than his predecessors have usually done he will not be called on to preside over the Senate very often. So he will enjoy the honor, which is fully deserved, without having to do much extra work. There is no truth in the report that Senator Harris and the President had quarreled.

A number of dogs have been poisoned in this village this winter. People should be very careful how they distribute the poison as there is a penalty against poisoning any animal and great danger to other animals, who it is that has put it out this winter is hard to say but several suspects have already been named.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Mr. Editor, think I have not wrote you since last moon, and during the interval many things have transpired storms, cyclones, earthquakes, a new administration, all these and even more have come to pass, and yet we live though winter lingers in the lap of Spring.

Farmers are longing and looking for seed time, hoping afterward to reap a bountiful harvest. But my superstition leads me to believe that our Spring will be late notwithstanding all other traditions.

In looking over my stock of news I find assistant superintendent of Hennepin county schools on the list. No doubt by this time France and Germany have it too for it has been published from Alpha to Omega. Now this man Shaver who has received so much criticism through the Press of late was born in Hennepin county, on the south shore of Lake Minnetonka nearly 40 years ago. Have known the family for years. They were among the first settlers in Hennepin county, and as far as my knowledge leads me Mr. Shaver's character is unimpeachable but is no relative of mine only through Adam. "But a prophet is not without honor save in his own country." Mr. Shaver has filled the office of assistant superintendent of schools under Mr. Lewis for two years or more with credit to himself and the schools of Hennepin county and we see no reason why he should not be retained especially when he seems to be the choice of Mr. Lewis. Some say Mr. Lewis made promises to other parties before election. This we know nothing about, and even if he did it is certainly nothing against Mr. Shaver as an assistant. Some say Mr. Lewis is a democrat and Mr. Shaver a republican and to the victor belong the spoils. Yes, Andrew Jackson was the first one to establish this as precedent a half century ago or more. But there is no statute law for it. It is only an unwritten law, or practice, and Mr. Shaver's being a republican does not disqualify him for the office though he holds his appointment under a democrat. Some of the best men I know are republicans. It has been said that Mr. Lewis was physically disqualified for the office this Mr. Lewis most emphatically denies. While on the other hand, some say Mr. S. is too robust and healthy and should be out on a farm where he could develope his muscles intimating he had more constitution than brains but as a rule it takes a good healthy robust man to have an active brain. Now Mr. Editor, I did not expect to go into print over this matter but my conscience rather forced me into it. Would say I am not working under pay neither do I expect any gift, emalument, or office. Am only for the fair thing though he be bond or free Jew or Gentile. Now I think there has already been spent enough of Bowie knife orritory over this matter and would suggest that we let the powers that be settle it, but will never consent to close my mouth in yindicating a friend when I think it justifiable. In this matter I am reminded of one of Shakespeares plays, "Much ado about nothing" but the Chanticleer upon his lofty perch has warned me that my time is up and I close these remarks in due form yours in favor of Democracy and the constitution. JOHN H. MCGARY.

Dr. A. J. Stone Describes the Present Hawaiian Situation.

Dr. A. J. Stone, who recently returned from a visit to the Hawaiian Islands and who was in Honolulu during the recent popular disturbance witnessed the landing of Capt. Willsie of the United States man-of-war Boston, says that it's almost universally understood that unless the United States takes measures to annex the Hawaiian Islands or establish a protectorate over them that they will ask England to do so. In answer to a question concerning the civilization of the people he states that every man, women and child on the islands can read and write and are universally well educated and intelligent. The prime minister he found to be a well educated man speaking several languages fluently. Mr. Stone thinks the Hawaiian islands worth more to us, by far, than Alaska. The doctor reports a very pleasant trip and predicts that these islands will be the Mecca for invalids the wide world over. He made the trip to and returned from Honolulu in the United States steamship Australia.—St. Paul News.

A Novel Idea.

A helping hand visitor's club has been established which is quite a novel and ingenious idea. In the cities are many young women, who earn their living or are attending school who would be glad to have a few week's recreation in the country during summer months, and whose means do not admit of their doing so, and who would cheerfully help sew, or do housework enough to earn their board. On the other hand many farmers families lack help just at this season of the year, and would be happy to have some one to help them for a few weeks to catch up their work. If they only had some one to sew a little each day or even to mind the children they would furnish them a nice room and give them all they could eat, of the best the farm affords. The object of the helping Hand Visitor's Club is to bring these two persons together and have them mutually benefited, making two persons happy for a short time at least. For further information write to the Secretary of Helping Hand Visitors' Club, 15 East Fourteenth Street, New York, enclosing a stamped envelope for reply.

THE population of Hawaii is 90,160, of whom 35,020 are pure natives and 5,840 mixed. Of the white races the Portuguese lead with 8,359, while there are 7,419 of foreign blood who were Hawaiian born. THE legislature of the state of Washington not only passed, but the governor has approved the bill making the sale of cigarettes illegal, and it is now a law. THE Jaffa & Jerusalem railroad is now doing a good business. It is fifty-three miles long, has five Baldwin locomotives from Philadelphia and cost $2,000,000. The fare from Jerusalem to Jaffa is $2.50 first class and $1 second class. It is a fact, and no joke, that real estate in Jerusalem is on the boom. It was a case of pure mischief, as when a puppy tears up an overshoe or a monkey goes through and wrecks a room, or college students throw a stove out of a fourth-story window. It seems to indicate man's connection with the animal. Evolution could take a few more turns at the wheel yet.

THE Massachusetts legislature has under consideration a bill making the state a retail liquor dealer. The plan intrusts the traffic to state agents under the supervision of a commission. Towns will have the right to establish local prohibition by so voting. The number of agencies is not to exceed one for every 1,000 inhabitants. Prices are to be fixed by the commission and must be only high enough to pay the cost of the system. The measure is a modification of the famous Gothenburg system, which, investigation shows, placed the sale of spirits in hands of responsible men and reduced the consumption.

Among the papers were many valuable ones which could not be placed in the vault every night and are therefore a total loss.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Doings of the State Law Makers at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, March 23.—The senate held a busy session and transacted some important business. The Minneapolis morgue bill was passed and, being a house bill, will now go to the governor. McMillan's primary election bill was lost, but afterwards reconsidered and referred for amendment, and subsequently passed.

The following bills were introduced: To amend the laws relating to farmers' mutual insurance companies; for a normal school at Tracy; asking congress for $50,000 for the improvement of Blue Earth river; to promote the keeping of records at county seats of old soldiers and of building monuments; relating to the descent of lands to surviving husband and wife; relating to conveyances by husband and wife; making liquor licenses personal property, subject to transfer, etc.; providing for a lien on lumber and timber to remain on lands where they float longer than nine months; making the spiking of logs a penal offense.

The house passed the Craig land grant forfeiture bill, the Merritt bill for opening and operating mines and quarries, and the important bill of Mr. Smith of Becker, relating to the abandonment and vacation of railways and collection of assessments. The Sanborn parole bill for the state's prison and reformatory also went through, and now, when signed by the governor, will be a law. It introduces the system of parole recommended by the governor in his inaugural address. But three new bills were introduced. In the afternoon Cairns' primary election bill and Bjorge's bill abolishing capital punishment were recommended for passage.

ST. PAUL, March 24.—In the senate two new bills were introduced, one by Senator Donnelly to amend the libel law, and the other by Dedon authorizing towns to issue bonds to pay outstanding indebtedness. Under the head of committee reports several measures were recommended for indefinite postponement—among them being the bill to establish the "City of Blaine," the state forestry bill, the bill to provide the defenders of Fort Ridgeley with medals and the bill to provide armories for the national guard.

Senator Ladue's vagrant law, Wyman's factory inspection bill, Hammer's bill relating to electric light companies and Sevatson's grain bill were among the bills passed by the senate.

In the house the following bills were introduced: Relating to titles of land; relating to the ownership of personal property; actions to recover real property.

The house concurred in the senate amendments to Abbott's bill relating to the adoption of children.

The house calendar was dispatched at the afternoon session and only one bill was defeated, the Turrell city and village lockup bill. The Cairns primary election bill went through with a whirl, and the bill abolishing the death penalty was passed with votes to spare. A singular point regarding the latter bill was the fact that the most enthusiastic opponents were the clergymen of the house, Rev. Wahlund of Isanti and the house chaplain, Rev. Mr. Fortin. There was a scene of deep interest attending the vote, brief explanation of votes, pro and con, being attended with expressions of applause, especially those that denounced judicial murders, and appealed for their abolition.

ST. PAUL, March 25.—In the house the regular order brought but a few new bills, and the list of long bills from the senate consumed the balance of the morning hour. Among them was the Peterson grain and warehouse bill, whose friends were anxious to advance it on its way to passage. The effort was made, by a motion of suspension of the rules, but an opposition developed, and the bill was allowed to lie over till a resolution can advance it to the place desired.

The senatorial reapportionment bill was reported from the committee and made the special order for Tuesday, 2 p. m.

The house, by resolution introduced by one of the Hennepin delegation, called for the judiciary committee to report the Dean anti-pool bill, which is required to be reported on Monday. The bill is in the sub-committee on constitutional law, of which Mr. Wilson of Goodhue is chairman, and it will probably be reported for indefinite postponement, on the ground that it is unconstitutional.

In the senate Keller's bill for the management of the state reformatory was amended in committee of the whole so as to prohibit whippings, and then sent to the calendar with a favorable recommendation.

The senate devoted the greater part of the session to the discussion of Leavitt's bill to provide for a bill to amend the constitution to cover the taxation of telegraph, telephone sleeping car and insurance companies on their gross earnings.

ST. PAUL, March 27.—In the senate the following bills were presented: Amending the law relating to fire departments; to grant additional powers to cities and villages in the issuance of bonds for the purchase of water or light plants; providing that where an inmate of a soldiers' home has a family, no officers of the home shall detain or receive any part of his pension money.

In committee of the whole the bill reapportioning the judicial districts developed considerable opposition and was recommitted. The house bill appropriating $50,000 to indemnify the members of the coal investigating committee against the damage suits instituted by John J. Rhodes was passed with an amendment that the funds not so used may be expended in the prosecution of the members of the combine in this and other states.

The house, when the time for the introduction of bills was reached, struck a snag. The question was raised whether the constitutional limit was reached. Speaker Lee, after considerable thought and consultation regarding the constitution, decided that the time for introduction had expired. It is stated there were 50 bills to be introduced tomorrow, when it was expected the constitutional limit would expire. This ruling cuts off many important bills, unless the governor will give his O. K. to their introduction. They include the charter bill, and the Markham gross earnings bill.

In the afternoon the following senate bills were passed: To authorize cities to issue bonds for water works; providing that suits against members of the legislature shall be thrown out of court; the wolf bounty bill; providing railroad platforms for loading and unloading heavy machinery; assorting and delivery of railroad ties; aid for the construction of railroads.

Senator Smith's bill to prevent the docking of horses' tails was lost.

The following bills were introduced by sanction of the governor: Relating to the sale and lease of mineral lands; to encourage the manufacture of iron. It provides for a royalty of 15 cents a ton on non-bessemer iron and 10 cents a ton for bessemer iron manufactured from Minnesota ore found on state lands.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES.

Items Regarding the Doings of Legislators at the Capitol.

The coal combine investigating committee have made further examination of the celebrated letter book and the papers taken from Mr. Rhodes' office. The committee permitted extracts to be copied from some of the letters.

In a letter to C. W. Adams, manager of the Lake Superior Coal company, of Ashland, Wis., who are not subscribers to the bureau, Mr. Rhodes says:

Notice is given to all wholesale dealers of the time to meet and adjust the prices and divisions. * * * The shippers put up $500 and the retailers $25—each to pay for maintaining the bureau.

Mr. Rhodes, in his statement to the committee, stated that the wholesalers pay $300 per year.

According to Mr. Rhodes' statement to the investigating committee, there are 169 retail subscribers who pay $25 per year, and seven wholesalers who pay $300 each. This would make the annual income $6,325.

Of the retail subscribers there are:

In Minneapolis	86
In St. Paul	55
In Duluth and West Superior	27
In Stillwater	6
In Midway	1
Total	169

The wholesalers are:

Lehigh Coal and Iron company.
Northwestern Fuel company.
Pioneer Fuel company.
Philadelphia and Reading Coal company.
Ohio Coal company.
St. Paul and Western Coal company.
Youghogheny and Lehigh Coal company.

The following letter, found on page 1 of the letter book, explains itself:

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 4, 1892.—Mr. C. E Wales, President, Minneapolis, Minn.—Dear Sir: Enclosed please find agreement to subscribe to the Minnesota Bureau of Coal Statistics and Information. I will say that I have submitted this to Mr. Bunn, of Lusk & Bunn, and he informs me that there is nothing illegal about it. Please sign and return same at your earliest convenience. Now, as there will not be probably many retailers join this association for the next 30 days, to put this bureau in proper shape, will you please send me your check for $100 on account?

Hoping to hear from you very soon, I remain yours respectfully, JOHN J. RHODES.

In one of the letters to Mr. Adams, manager of the Lake Superior Coal company, Mr. Rhodes writes:

The division is generally equal, except occasionally the Northwestern Fuel company has been given a small percentage of advantage, which seems to have been entirely satisfactory.

Now Judge Brill, of the Ramsey district court, has brought himself under the censure of the legislature. Hiler Horton had occasion to appear before the judge as counsel in a suit, and before the case was over the court took Mr. Horton to task for words alleged to have been spoken in the legislature the day previous that were derogatory to the said court. When the legislature convened the next day the following preamble and resolution were introduced and adopted:

Whereas, It has been represented to this house that on the 21st day of March, A. D. 1893, at the city of St. Paul, in this state, the Hon. H. R. Brill, one of the judges of the district court in and for Ramsey county, in open court did order and require Hon. Hiler H. Horton, a member of this house, to appear before him, the said H. R. Brill, at the bar of his court, and did then and there, in violation of the provisions of section 8 of article 4, of the constitution of this state, question said Hiles H. Horton for a speech and debate made and spoken in this house by him, said Horton, while a member of this house, and did then and there reprimand and threaten the said Horton for the said speech and debate, and by so doing did put said Horton in great fear, and humiliated him before the public—all in violation of the constitution of the state, and in utter disregard of the rights of the said Hiler H. Horton as a member of this house; therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the speaker to inquire into the said matters, with full power and authority to summon and examine witnesses, administer oaths and take testimony, and make speedy report thereon to this house, with such recommendations as to them seem proper in the premises.

The chair appointed Messrs. Wilson, F. M., Howard and McGuire members of the committee.

Mr. Langum offered a resolution declaring that C. D. and T. D. O'Brion, attorneys for Rhodes, of the coal combine, on account of their obnoxious action and considering that they had been about the house as lobbyists, be denied admission to the floor for the remainder of the session.

The resolution was adopted without a dissenting voice after short but decisive expressions of opinion.

The coal combine investigating committee has shown that it means business regarding the prosecution of John J. Rhodes and others who are connected with the alleged coal combine, even though the prosecution fails of its purpose. Recently the committee met with Attorney General Childs to see what action in this direction could be taken, and after mature deliberation it was decided to commence prosecution not only of John J. Rhodes, the manager of the bureau, but also to bring in the various members of the coal association.

The coal companies that come in for prosecution are the Pioneer Fuel company, the Northwestern Fuel company, the Ohio Fuel company, the Youghiogheny Coal company, the St. Paul and Western Coal company, the Lehigh company, the Delaware, Lackawana & Western company.

The prosecution will be conducted in the federal courts under the federal law against combinations, which is very stringent and provides a heavy penalty. The prosecution will commence as soon as the attorney general can make out the necessary papers.

The house received a resolution from Governor Nelson, which had been sent to him from the Nebraska legislature, and proposing a convention of representatives of all the Mississippi valley states to decide the advisability of building a railroad from Lake Superior to the Gulf of Mexico. The expense of building the road is estimated at $27,600,000, and according to the resolution, a tax of 10 cents per acre on the lands in the state benefited would build the road and give a surplus of $2,000,000. The communication was laid on the table.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

The Legislature and the Coal Combine.

The fight between the legislature and the coal combine was transferred to the district court of Ramsey county, when Basil Smout, sergeant-at-arms of the house of representatives, was called before Judge Egan to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt in not surrendering to the sheriff of Ramsey county the books belonging to the combine.

Mr. Smout excited the ire of the court and the attorneys for John J. Rhodes, general manager of the combine, by stepping to a telephone in the court house just before the opening of the court and telephoning Robert A. Walsh, a member of the joint legislative investigating committee, telling him that the books were in the treasurer's office and formally turning them over to him. Deputy Sheriff Reichow was dispatched in hot haste to the capitol with an order to bring the books to the court house, but he was not quick enough, for before he reached the capitol Mr. Walsh had secured the books and had the whole house of representatives back of him.

A resolution was at once introduced in the house by Representative Cole requiring Judge Egan to appear in the court and show cause why he was detaining the sergeant-at-arms of the body from attending to his duty. This brought the excitement to a high pitch, but Representative Staples cut short the proposed summary proceedings by giving notice of debate, and the resolution went over to Monday.

In the meantime, in the district court, Christopher D. O'Brien, speaking for General Manager Rhodes, excoriated the legislature without mercy for what he termed its outrageous and illegal action. Judge Egan decided that while he was disposed to punish Sergeant-at-arms Smout he could find no statutory authority for so doing. He followed Mr. Smout's discharge with an order citing Representative Walsh to appear before him with the letter books.

The following morning Mr. Walsh appeared in court, but the letter book did not appear with him. He was on the witness stand when the colored sergeant-at-arms of the house, J. W. Wells, made his appearance on the scene, and without paying any too much respect to the dignity of the court, informed Judge Egan that the house of representatives was under a call, and he had been sent to bring Mr. Walsh in.

The room was crowded and a twitter went round as every one present tumbled to what was up. Judge Egan was so taken by surprise that it took a few moments to collect himself, and then he asked the officer of the legislature to step back. "I must have reasons why you will not let Mr. Walsh go, if you so decide," said Wells. The court looked at all the attorneys, said a few mild words and then asked the O'Briens if they were through with the witness. They said yes, and Walsh and Wells left the building. The crowd thoroughly enjoyed what was going on, and the merriment probably nettled Judge Egan a little, for he proceeded to roast Wells. He declared his actions outrageous and indiscreet, and the attorneys for both sides agreed with him, but what could be done? The attorney general said that Sergeant-at-arms Smout was needed at the capitol, and the judge had to let him go also. He then adjourned the court until afternoon.

In the afternoon he was confronted with an affidavit that Walsh was a member of the house, and he then threw the whole case out of court.

A Priest Arrested.

An indictment was found by the grand jury at Luverne against Rev. Father Englebrecht, pastor of the St. Catherine Catholic church, after a deliberation of over 24 hours. The charge set forth in the indictment is that of rape, alleged to have been committed on the person of Miss Aggie O'Connor, on April 7, 1892. Last Christmas eve Miss O'Connor gave birth to an illigitimate child. Whether it was born alive or dead is at present a question which the grand jury is trying to solve.

Down to Death.

S. P. Lyon, a carpenter, fell off the freight elevator in the wholesale hardware house of Janey, Semple & Co., Minneapolis, and struck on his head three stories below in the basement. He was killed. How he happened to fall is unknown. He was at work making some repairs on the third floor, and came down with a fellow workman to receive a load of lumber. He returned to the elevator alone and probably stepped off the open end.

News in Brief.

This action was taken at the request of the millers. Heretofore Minnesota inspection in Wisconsin has not extended outside of the elevators.

State Weighmaster Edwin McManus of Duluth has tendered his resignation, to take effect May 1. J. G. McGrew, a newspaper man of Crookston, will succeed him.

Charles Davis, a brakeman on the Chatfield branch of the Northwestern railway, was run over at Eyota Junction. He was standing on the tender and slipped and fell beneath the car when the train started. Both legs were run over. He was brought to Rochester and died at St. Mary's hospital in a short time.

Editor Thomas, of the La Prairie News, was held in $2,500 bonds to the next term of the circuit court for assault with a deadly weapon. In default of bail he went to jail.

Charles Green of Johnson, O., while attempting to board a train at Litchfield, fell under it and was killed.

An old gentleman aged about 75 years, named Iver Dahl, was struck by the east bound passenger train near Boyd. The entire train ran over him, crushing one leg and injuring him internally. He was taken to Boyd for medical treatment, but died two hours after the accident.

The coroner's jury in the matter of the death of Fred Stanke, at Centerville, returned a verdict that deceased came to his death by reason of a gunshot wound inflicted by Louis Kiichli.

LABOR AND REST.

Against the wind! Against the wind!
With eager, rapid haste it flies;
Until with joy its nest it find—
The beauteous bird of Paradise.

And he who hath one end in view,
Towards that must always urge his course;
To right and his own self most true—
With steady, undiminished force.

Against the stream! Against the stream!
Which ever, ever floweth strong.
Though oft to lookers-on, it seem
The course he takes is surely wrong.

He may not rest! He cannot rest!
O, yet there is much work to do;
For duty calls! Her stern behest,
Bids him his glorious task pursue.

He cannot stop! He may not cease!
What careth he for wind or tide!
He fears not battle; seeks not peace;
His conscience is a faithful guide.

For port he steers! Towards home he steers!
Eager is he for promised rest;
He finds it, after hopes and fears,
Like bird of Paradise its nest.

THE SENATOR'S COAT.

How It Served a Colored Minister for Many Years.

When Senator Mersey reached home one evening late in the autumn he was met at the door by his wife. It was a fine old mansion, and the hall was broad and inviting. Mrs. Mersey was an ideal hostess, and her parlors were the center from which emanated the best moral and benevolent influences.

Senator Mersey had founded a college for colored people in the south, and had endowed or become a trustee of several other institutions. His name was a tower of benevolence. Mrs. Mersey was a true helpmeet. Her charities were bestowed with such untiring zeal and cultivated wisdom that people came to her to be taught how to help others.

One day when some one told her a heart-wringing story about a poor woman she exclaimed, with tears in her eyes:

"Oh, give me her address! I would rather see that woman than the Queen of Sheba." And the best of it was, she not only meant what she said but did it.

"How fine you look!" she said that autumn evening twenty years ago, as she met her husband at the door. He laughed gently.

"Oh, do I? Well, it is my old overcoat that deserves the compliment. I have had it pressed."

"I am glad you have," replied the lady, "for I have left a place for it in the box that goes down south to-morrow. You will have to buy a new one."

It never occurred to the senator to differ from his wife in such matters—or any matters at all; and the next day, when the box was nailed up, the senator's overcoat was nailed up in it.

That was, as I have said, long ago, and thoughtfulness for the poor was so common in that household that the senator and his wife forgot all about it.

Now, I am telling a true story, only changing names and places, so as to protect the modesty of two of Christ's servants, who are careful that their left hands do not tell their right hands of their noble deeds.

Last year Mr. and Mrs. Senator Mersey visited the south. They stopped at a little sunny town, and there met a colored minister, who, though poor, was in many respects far above the average of the colored people about him.

His wife was a lovable woman—intelligent, thrifty and neat. She had been a schoolmistress for several years, and was a devoted mother, inspiring her children with a strong desire for an education. Indeed, so well had this worthy couple done in this respect that their oldest boy is professor of Greek in a colored college, and would be honored as a citizen in any community.

When these good people learned the names of their visitors they showed unexpected emotion. On being questioned, the minister's wife told the following story:

"About twenty years ago my husband was sent as a delegate to the Methodist convention. That was before you were sent to England to the conference"—she turned toward her husband with a proud smile. "I must say his overcoat was quite shabby. It had been worn four years; I had done the best for it I could. Before they made him moderator Deacon Garvin came up to him.

"'Brother Jackson,' said he, 'you ought to have another overcoat.'

"'I have a good one on, that I am sure can't be a stumbling block to the people of Zion.'

"'I dunno 'bout that,' said the deacon, feeling of the overcoat from collar to pockets. 'Now, I can jes' fix you up finely, Brother Jackson,' said he. 'A box has jes' come from Senator Mersey, and in it is an overcoat that will fit you like the rind on a persimmon, and you can send your overcoat to some poor brother down on the narrergage.'

"So he brought out the overcoat, and my husband tried it on, and it fitted him finely. It was a beautiful overcoat. And how long do you suppose he wore that overcoat?"

She turned triumphantly to Mrs. Mersey.

"Three years, perhaps?" inquired the lady, feeling almost as if she were insulting the family. "It was quite worn out, wasn't it, dear?" She appealed to her distinguished husband.

"I don't think I recall the giving of the overcoat," he said, smoothing the rim of his hat.

"You don't mean that?" The minister's wife looked quite hurt. "Why, it was such a fine overcoat! My husband wore it six years, and then, I must say, it began to look a little shabby, didn't it, Mr. Jackson?"

Mr. Jackson nodded vigorously.

"Then I set my wits to work, and found a way out of the trouble. I told him I would rip the seams and turn it, and put it together again, and then, as the material was so fine, it would be as good as new.

"'But suppose you can't fit the pieces together,' said he, 'then I shall be without any coat.'

"'You give me the coat and just trust me,' said I. So I ripped it up, and cleaned it, and sewed it together, and, sure enough, it was almost as good as new. I put on it a new collar and new buttons. I declare it made the good man quite too vain to live, for Deacon Garvin said to him:

"'Where did you get your new overcoat, Brother Jackson? Has the lightning of the Lord struck your house?'

"'It has,' he said. 'The Lord has given me a powerful wife. It's the same old overcoat of Senator Mersey's, turned inside out.'

"It was such a beautiful material, you see, Mrs. Mersey! And he wore that coat for five years more.

"'Now,' says he, 'wife, I suppose I shall have to throw Senator Mersey's overcoat away. It's getting almost too shabby to wear.'

"And I had to confess that it was pretty bad, all stained and colored with age. But I thought it over for a week. It was of such nice material and had been so handsome that it really seemed a shame to throw it away. It was like an old friend. One morning when I was a-washing, it occurred to me, 'Why, it can be dyed. It is such good stuff, it will take the dye nicely.' Surely the Lord sent me that thought.

"So I ripped it up again, and dyed it, and got a quarter of a yard for a new collar, and new buttons, and for less than two dollars he had such a good-looking overcoat that it was, I am sure, almost the envy of the country. Brother Garvin would have liked to have seen it, but the good man has gone to glory."

She stopped for breath, while Senator and Mrs. Mersey looked from one to another with the smiles that border on tears.

"Well, do you know, my husband wore that coat for five years more," she began, in a quieter tone. "The first two years the dye held its color very well. Then it of course faded and looked seedy, and I must say, toward the end, it was very shabby indeed. Then my husband was ashamed to wear it, and I had mended it all I could, and I was ashamed to have him. We both felt badly about it.

"'You can do nothing more with it. I've worn it inside and outside, and I reckon now I'll have to go without.' My husband said this. I knew it was true, and I went into the bedroom and had a good cry. I reckon I must have prayed right smart over it, for one night the inspiration from on high came to me—why not make it over for a coat for Jimmy? He needs an overcoat. The Lord surely sent that thought to me.

"Jimmy was just ten years old then; that was four years ago. So I ripped it up and cut off the worst parts and made a very good-looking coat for Jimmy. You see, it was such fine material I couldn't help but use it as the Lord told me.

"You ought to have seen Jimmy strut around with that coat on. He thought it was the finest coat in town, and so warm."

She stopped and looked at her husband and wiped away a furtive tear while she stifled a cough.

"Where is Jimmy?" asked Mrs. Mersey, choking. "I should like to see Jimmy with the overcoat on."

"He died two years ago," came the low reply. "The Lord took him. I'm sure he's better off with Him than with us."

The mother broke down. She went over to her dusky husband and took his hand and put it on her cheek and kissed it. It was a rare caress.

"Excuse me," she said, turning to her guests in apology. "Jimmy was our youngest, and we loved him so much. The Lord loved him, too, I think, so He took him where he will be safe forever."

With that expression of the simple and supreme faith which puts to shame all cold and scientific explanations of the awful mystery of death, she went out of the room to hide her sorrow.

But soon she came back. While she was gone not a word was spoken in the neat parlor. The old minister could not speak, and his visitors' eyes were full, and their lips quivered.

"Here is the coat," said Mrs. Jackson, tenderly. She held it up.

What a travesty—what a ghost of an overcoat it was.

The senator from one of the proudest states in the union looked at it seeking for a familiar feature. Then he arose and felt for his pocketbook.

"Permit me, madam," he said, in his stately way, "to have the honor of purchasing that overcoat of you at its original price. I should like to take it to the north. I am sure I can make it the means of sending down many other overcoats to your people by giving its history as you have told it."

"I don't see how I can, sir," pleaded the mother. "It seems so like an old friend, and then—and then—it was Jimmy's!"

"I think you will excuse her, sir," said the husband; "you see we've become attached to it."

"Never mind," said the senator's wife, soothingly; "I know another way of letting the overcoat tell its own story to generous people."

And I hope she may not be dissatisfied with the way it has been told.—Herbert D. Ward, in Youth's Companion.

She Gave Him a Hint.

A lady had been ill and under medical treatment. As she grew no better all the while, she became distrustful of her physician's skill and did not wish to see him, and yet was not bold enough to tell him so. She communicated her state of mind to her maid.

"Lave 'im to me, mum, lave 'im to me!" said the girl.

By and by the doctor came to the door, and Bridget opened it about an inch.

"Sorry, sir," said she, "but ye can't come in the day, docthor!"

"Can't come in? How's that?"

"The misthress do be too ill for to see ye the day, sir!"—Youth's Companion.

—Noisier Than on 'Change.—He was a Chicago man and was taking in the house of representatives before leaving Washington. He listened to the rattling of the gavel, the echoes of "Mr. Speaker," and the rattle of oratorical musketry with astonishment so great that he became silent. In a few minutes he rose and made for the door. "Where are you going?" asked his friend. "I'm going," he said with deliberate emphasis, "I'm going back to Chicago. I'm going back to the board of trade, where it's quiet."—Washington Star.

AIR SHIELDS US FROM DANGER.

Protecting the Earth from Being Injured by Erratic Interstellar Missiles.

The sensational statements which were widely published during the recent appearance of a strange comet in Andromeda, and the attention which was drawn to the Biela swarm of meteors at about the same time, served to remind every one of a singular and, in some respects, important office of the atmosphere that we seldom think of. The atmosphere is not only a cover for the earth, serving to keep it warm by retaining the heat derived from the sun, but it is also a shield, which effectually protects the earth against missiles from space. The service which the soft, transparent air thus renders is, indeed, a wonderful one, according to the Youth's Companion. Many thousands of meteors every day run into the atmosphere with a velocity averaging sixty times that of a cannon ball, and yet we are perfectly safe, because they cannot reach the ground except in the form of microscopic particles of dust. But for the resistance interposed by the atmosphere the mortality from meteors might form an interesting list in the general statistics of mankind. It is the excessive velocity of the meteors which leads to their destruction. Making due allowance for the comparative rarity of the air at the great height at which meteors become luminous, the heat developed by their rush of twenty-five or thirty miles in a second must be sufficient to dissipate them almost instantly. In the case of the Biela meteors, it is pretty definitely known that the particles which enter the atmosphere, when the earth in its orbit meets the meteoric swarm, once formed part of the mass of a comet, known as Biela's comet, which split into two parts in 1846, and was last seen in the form of a comet—then a double comet—in 1852. But every year in the month of November, when the earth approaches very near to the path in which the missing comet formerly traveled, and which is followed by the meteors that now apparently represent all that is left of the comet, a greater or less number of these meteors plunge into the air and are consumed.

SWIMMING ON HORSEBACK.

Some Horses Sink Much Deeper in the Water Than Others.

Swimming horses across a flooded creek or river is a common and on some stations almost daily occurrence in Australia during the rainy season. As a rule I have remained seated in the saddle while swimming my horse across a flooded river, and have found the buoyancy of the horse to vary quite as much as that of a human being, says a writer in the London Field. I have had some horses which would swim with the seat of the saddle clear above the water, while others on the contrary swim so deeply that only the ears, eyes, and nose were visible. In the latter case the sooner the rider slips over the tail the better. If you are not in the saddle I do not think it matters much whether you swim at the horse's head or his tail, or on your back, breast or side. Of course, the nearer you are to his head the better chance you have of guiding him if necessary, but as a rule horses will swim as fast and as straight as they can to the nearest landing point. In the whole course of my experience I have never seen but one horse unable or unwilling to swim, and on this occasion the horse turned on his side immediately it found itself in deep water, and, refusing to make the slightest effort, it was drowned. In my opinon the most important thing to do when swimming any horse across a stream is to unbuckle your snaffle rein, and, if riding with a double-reined bridle, cut the stitches of the curb rein. Practically the only danger there is lies in the risk of the horse getting his fore legs entangled in the bridle, which can easily be avoided.

DWARFS IN MOROCCO.

Stunted in Growth Because of Poor Food and a Rigorous Climate.

The existence of a race of dwarfs on the Atlas range, about which there was an animated controversy last year, has received unexpected confirmation. Walter B. Harris, who has just returned from a journey in southern Morocco, communicates the facts to the London Times. While traveling along the foot of the mountains he saw thirteen or fourteen persons, none of whom were over four feet six inches in height, natives of the upper mountain regions. The Moors describe them as "a wild people, living in built houses in the rocks and snow, hunting mouflon with extraordinary agility and given to shooting anyone penetrating to their domains." He attributes their small stature not, as some have asserted, to the fact that they are the remnants of the troglodytes, but to the circumstances in which they live. He believes them to be "merely a certain collection of Shleh tribes, who, through the high altitude at which they live and the extremes of climate they are subject to, from their poverty and inability to raise crops, from the scarcity and bad quality of such food as they are able to collect, have, in the lapse of centuries, become of almost extraordinarily stunted growth." On his return journey to the coast Mr. Harris visited the artificial caves of Ain Tarsilt, which, from the height of the roofs and the size of the doors, windows and alcoves for beds, were evidently the work of dwarfs. He does not venture an opinion, however, as to whether any descendants of this people are still living.

The April Wide Awake

has a gossipy, descriptive sketch of quaint old Williamsburg, a reminder of the Colonial days of Virginia, written by Edwin A. Start, and illustrated by Louis A. Holmon. It opens with "The Tansy Cake," a story-sketch of an old-time English Easter happening, by M. Carrie Hyde, also an American Eastertide story of Creole life, "How the Lilies Work," by Kate Chopin. Louise Chandler Moulton has an April "Rondel," and Theron Brown an Easter poem, "The April Child." Frederick A. Ober contributes his fourth "Columbus" sketch, telling of Isabella, "the first city in the New World;" Agnes Blackwell tells a delightful wonder story about "Willie and the Tree-deedle;" Abd el Ardavan has a Moorish story of a brave boy, "Ebno'l Amed;" Sarah Winter Kellogg gives a glimpse of life in New Mexico "In the Delegate's Placeta;" Mary Catherine Crowley contributes a capital Indian story, "Jeff's Strange Adventure." The serials by Stddary, Molly Elliott Seawell and Mrs. Jenness are full of interest.

Royal Baking Powder
Is Absolutely Pure

WHILE there are so many alum baking powders in the market, the use of which all physicians decide render the food unwholesome and liable to produce dyspepsia and other ailments, housekeepers should exercise the utmost care to prevent any powder but the Royal from being brought into their kitchens.

In the use of Royal there is an absolute certainty of pure and wholesome food.

The official State Chemists report: The Royal Baking Powder does not contain ammonia, alum, lime, nor any injurious ingredients. It is absolutely pure and wholesome.

The Government reports show all other baking powders to contain impurities.

In the use of any baking powder but Royal there is uncertainty if not actual danger.

It is unwise to take chances in matters of life and health.

A Stormy Wooing.

Gen. Butler had a stormy wooing. His betrothed, Sarah Hildreth, was a New England schoolma'am, and tiring of the profession she went on the stage, whereat Benjamin was full of wrath. His expostulations were in vain, however, until one night when Miss Hildreth was in Cincinnati playing Pauline in the "Lady of Lyons." He suddenly appeared behind the scenes, fierce and stormy. He gave Pauline until the end of the play to decide whether she'd be the Lady of Lyons or Mrs. Butler. She chose the less conspicuous role and left the stage.

Pleasant Canvassing

Bell-ringing canvassing is hard business. THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL is universally wanted. Most of the people would take it if some one would ask them to. There's work in everything where there's profit, but there's more profit and less work in some things than in others. It is easy to get subscriptions for THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL; easier than to get them for any other publication anywhere. It is rapid work and profitable. It reduces the disagreeableness of canvassing to a minimum. We want to hear from you.

SPURGEON WROTE

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.
Yours heartily,
(Rev.) C. H. SPURGEON,

DELANO DIARY

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—Parsons is running his mill night and day and making up for lost time.

—Our copy of the Toledo Blade received, this A. M., was blackened and soiled in great shape. Possibly it traveled with the coal combine.

—Veterinary Surgeon Walter is working harder than common as Spring approaches.

—Mr. Cameron, from Duluth, is occupying the Peter Simonson house, on South Third Street.

—John Cunningham has been confined to the house for about a week studying over the afflictions of the patient Job.

—Charley Cunningham is superintending a crew of men putting in heating apparatus for the Wood's Harvester Works, in St. Paul.

—Our livery men complain that there is too much snow in the lanes and too little in the fields where they have to drive around. Maybe they are hard to suit.

—The sociable at Mrs. Jonas Johnson's, on Saturday evening, was well enjoyed by quite a large crowd. Some of the folks were just a little boistrous for a church sociable.

—This has been a fine week for our city council to study the drainage system of the village. It is quite plain to the most casual observer where several drains could be placed to advantage.

—J. C. Hitz has gone to Congress. That is he has moved with his family to Congress Street, West St. Paul, where the latch string will be always out for his many Delano friends who may chance to have leisure in the Capital city.

—The water is pumped through a new set of pipes from the river to the tank for the G. N'n., at this point, the old pipe having given out. The new one is laid on top of the ground for temporary use and has to be thawed out mornings. Dad is up in time all right anyway.

—We tender our thanks to Mr. Wm. Ziebarth for not forgetting to bring the printer a liberal slice of wedding cake, after the marriage of his son, Wm. T. to Miss Sadie Lutz. The young married people take up their residence at Herman, Minn., where the best wishes of a host of friends goes with them.

—On Saturday, at the post office, the sale of the David Robinson 40 acres took place. O. L. Billings was auctioneer. Jos. Leudasher made the first bid $1200. Charles Sells bid more and things were quite lively for a few minutes when it was finally knocked off to Jos Leudasher for $1410. Mrs. Deems is to have 10 acres of it at the price Joe paid.

—New Seeders are beginning to be hauled onto some of the farms near here. Machinery is a good thing to have but much of it is left to stand in the weather and allowed to become useless long before it would wear out if kept properly. It will pay any farmer to build a shed for all his machinery. He will in a very short time save money enough, to say nothing of the vexations, to pay for the shed and more too.

—If you wish to post up on general topics, including the last census statistics, religion, sciene or almost any subject call in and get one of the "World's Almanacs" for 25 cts. or get the Almanac and the GAZETTE for one year by paying $1.18 in advance. We will furnish old subscribers who pay for a year in advance, at the same rate. Now is your chance and when you hear an argument you will have something for authority from which to settle who is in the right.

—An informal meeting of the council and saloon-keepers, was held one evening, this week, at which, rumor says, a bargain was made to allow Sunday opening of saloons a part of the day. By what authority such a bargain could be made we are not prepared to say. Neither are we prepared to say that it was made. The law has provided a contract for the village council and saloon-keepers to sign in which either party states what they will do. The seller pays $500. for certain privileges and is entitled to them and no others. Keeping open Sundays; evenings, after 11 o'clock; selling to minors, or habitual drunkards, are not among the privileges paid for, and, whenever taken, subject the offenders to the charge of violating their contract; in which case their license could be taken away. The village officers are elected to administer the laws as they find them; or, under certain restritions to make new ordinances. Not to violate those under which they assume to govern the village, nor to bargain away privileges not in the contract. If the high license law is not the correct thing do away with it in the proper manner, and not pretend to be governed by it while winking at its daily and nightly violation.

—Deck Sturman is assisting at Young's livery barn for the present.

—The obstreperous bird up street has concluded to let up on abusing the town pump. So she says! Good.

—Conductor Roy Mulford and his mother drove over to Watertown on Sunday for a few hours visit with old friends and acquaintances.

—Wagons made their appearance on our streets on Tuesday morning the snow having melted away until sleighing was too hard work.

—Prof. Heller's show at this place was not very extensively attended and the gate money, we understand was not enough to meet actual expenses.

—To-day is Good Friday kept in some places as a holiday in commemoration of the death of Jesus on the cross, that sinners might have eternal life.

—J. B. Dugan informs us that this is the anniversary of the battle of Clontarf between the Irish and Northmen, in 1014. J. B. is authority on such subjects.

—Our miller, J. W. Parsons wishes the public to know that he is all right and the mill is running in apple pie order and that he will smilingly do justice to all customers.

—To the casual observer, as well as to the pedestrian who wishes to get to and from the depot it looks as if cars could as will be left a few feet on either side as well as square across the crossing.

—John Lohmiller sports a new spring coat of many colors. He seems to be crowding the season just a little but probably heard them Robbins holler and thought to keep up with the times.

—Adam Horsch has the frame up for his mill. He does not propose to quit milling simply because the mill burned but will soon doubtless be able to accommodate customers even better than before the fire

—It is the business of the Health Officer to make each year about the 1st of May, a thorough inspection of the Sanatory condition of the village. Clean up as well as possible save our people from the Cholera.

—A communication appropo the post office situation appears in another place. Since the edict that no former officers are to be appointed unless endorsed by a majority of the people an election would be a proper way of getting at the matter.

—Through a mistake the bondsmen for a couple of our village officers were reported wrong last week. The bondsmen for R. M. Walter, justice of the peace are I. C. Lewis and J. D. Young; for J. D. Brandon, constable, C. M, Conzet and J. A. Brasie.

—Persons in whose houses births or deaths occur are compelled by law to report the same to the Health officer within ten days or be subject to a fine of $20. In the country they must report to the town clerk. The officer does not have to call for them.

—Joe Wiesolok and family who returned last January, to Germany, with the expectation of making that their future home have got back to Delano satisfied to remain here, and are desirous of purchasing a small piece of land on which to live and make a home.

—Prof. Dewey requests us to announce that there will be no school next week. The summer term will begin Monday, April 10. Let all the pupils enjoy their vacation, and be prepared to attend regularly and study harder than ever during the Spring months.

—The Eagle twits us about the boy who in answering the question "What educational journal do you read?" very properly said, BUFFALO GAZETTE, not getting a certificate. Superintendent Lindsley desires the public to know that he "never authorized any such statement."

—Our post office has already partially passed into Democratic hands. Miss Tillie, daughter of Valentine Eppel who is longingly looking for the appointment, has accepted a position with the present incumbent. We hear that Mr. Vorse will try the Insurance business for a season.

—Circulars from Robert P. Porter were received in town this week, asking for information concerning facts for the completion of the Eleventh census. It strikes us that a census that is so long being taken will be of little use in this progressive country save from a historical point of view.

—A nice sewer, constructed in accordance with scientific principles, along one side of a couple of our main streets, would allow the water to get out of the village instead of finding its way into cellars where it will remain for weeks, aiding in producing fevers and other diseases among the inhabitants.

—Mr. Buckley, of the Eagle staff, is seriously contemplating a visit to Ould England, his former home, in the near future. His brother who recent preceded him in his return to his mother country, has engaged in the printing business there. It is possible that C. J. may become so enamored with the situation as to enter into a co-partnership and remove his family to that Island beyond the Atlantic's stormy bossom.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—Rosa Murphy has been having the Typhoid Pneumonia this week.

—Marbles is the game among the boys now, a sure precursor of Spring.

—Read about the Legislature and the coal combine on the inside of this paper.

—Rev. Ross will preach at the Presbyterian church, on Sunday at 10:30 A. M.

—Bock Bros. appear to be having some difficulties about their boilers at the feed mill.

—Thomas Lanway, one of the Independence farmers was doing business in town one day this week.

—We received this A. M. sixty pages of the Inter-Ocean, which takes this means of calling attention to the fact that it is 21 years old, March 25.

—Sunday evening, April 2nd, at the M. E. church, there will be given, in connection with the evening service, a short Easter programme. All are invited.

—On Tuesday a flock of Robbin red breasts made their appearance in our midst. Their cheerful "cherups" sounded considerably like Spring might soon come.

—Ex-Mayor Coolen and his crew turned pedestrians yesterday and footed it from Smith Lake to Howard Lake. John says "It is a very long three miles, when a fellow is hungry."

—The Eagle intimates, after her usual style, that there are three aspirants for the post office here, and names Dr. Catlin as one, in the field. If the doctor gets it, it will be a clear case of the office seeking the man, and not because the doctor is running after Dan Lawler, Mike Doran, Major Baldwin or any other man. The Eagle's insinuations to the contrary, notwithstanding.

Mrs. Farnsworth, of St. Paul, visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Gross this week.

Julius Hardt and wife, of Maple Plain, attended the Evangelical Lutheran church here to-day.

Mrs. Greenfield and daughter, of Duluth, visited at Williman Gross, the latter part of the week

Mr. and Mrs. Leon Frazier of Morris, on their way to Minneapolis, visited friends here, on Saturday.

J. F. Soderstrom, of Winsted, will move into town shortly having traded for Olof Peterson's shoe business.

Mrs. I. H. Grafft returned to Hamline, Monday accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. C. J. Buckley and family.

Miss M. E. Bennett, of Woodland, and at one time teacher in the Public school here, visited Delano friends this week.

Christian Barth, of Watertown, has sold out and is making his home with his son-in-law, Geo. P. Schaffer, of this place.

Mr. and Mrs. John Batdorf and Mr. and Mrs. Grant Beal and son, of Independence, made Delano a business visit, on Monday.

Chairman of the Democratic county committee Wm. Quinn, passed through town last night on his way home from the cities.

County Cullings.

William Bennett, of Woodland, now has a position on the editorial staff of the St. Louis Republic.

Senator Eaton publishes in his paper quite a plausible story concerning his voting against the bill taxing railroads.

W. W. Warrick, late of Sidney, Fremont county, Iowa, returned, with the symptoms of Spring, to again take up his abode in Minnesota. His address now is Annandale.

Last week's Tribune gave J. F. McDonnell's speech delivered at Maple Lake on St. Patrick's day. J. F. keeps up his reputation in this line.

There is no hay seed in Hon. Mr. Craig's hair and when he gets in earnest about getting out from under the iron heel of the Wright county Republican machine, he wins.

No fitter celebration of the anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, the Father of the Democratic party, could be held, than the establishing of a Jefferson club of Wright county. Let our county committee move in this matter.

The Sherburne County Star-News thinks John Nugent would stand a good chance of being elected Senator if Sherburne county is retained as a part of this district. Haven't they read the Eagle on Nugent, or don't they take any more stock in her s-c-r-e-e-c-h-e-s than do Wright county people?

Spring will doubtless be upon us all of a sudden in a few days. Be ready to sow your seed at the earliest opportunity. Don't have to wait a day or two to go to town and maybe to send to the factory for a piece of your machinery. Have it all ready for action. Those that sow early usually reap the most bounteous harvest.

Wrignt county may, and she may not, be set off for a Senatorial district of her own. Representative Craig, of Sherburne, poured forth some strong reasons for having it so. It seems to be the wish of most of our neighbors in Sherburne to be detached from us and a great many Wright county people think it would be better. Our interests would probably be as well looked after and Sherburne could have more to say if she was attacked where she desires. As it is Wright county politicians don't seem to give Sherburne much chance. Senator Eaton is forninst it we understand.

Post Office Appointment.

DEAR EDITOR:—Some Republican newspapers state that the new administration will not appoint postmasters, who held office before; and that therefore, Mr. So and So visited this or that Democratic boss to get the appointment by the deciding influence of said boss.—This is misleading the people by grafting a lie on half a truth.—It was till now the despicable rule of both parties, that the recommendation of a Congressman, Senator, or party boss was necessary for an appointment.

But the aversity of Cleveland to all undue influence of the machine politicians is as well-known as that he was nominated in full opposition to that fraternity. The influence of democratic bosses will count for very little with the new administration. And in full accordance with this is it that this administration is averse to the appointment of former postmasters.

Appointed by the influence of some political boss, they were in many cases the henchmen of these bosses, and the corrupting influence on the public vote of such a large mass of interested office holders should have been stopped long ago as it does not agree with Democratic principles.

I believe that if the voters of Delano want a postmaster of their own choice. They should hold a public meeting, nominate somebody for the office and recommend his appointment. Such an action would outweigh the imaginary influence of any political boss as well as any indorsement of a few citizens M.

Spectatorium.

The dome of "The MacKaye Spectatorium" is 250 feet high. The immense roof gardens and restaurants are half as high. To transport people to those portions of the building The Columbian Celebration Company has entered into a contract with The Standard Elevator Company to supply fifteen of the largest and best passenger elevators ever built. These elevators are to be equipped with the latest speed and safety appliances and are to have a carrying capacity of 10,000 people per hour. They will, in themselves, form a most interesting exhibit surpassing anything of the kind at the Fair.

"What do you know, oh, maiden fair?"
"Oh, I know much," she made reply;
"I know of Homer and Moliere;
I can make poetry if I try,
Or send sonatas with a crash
Out of my three-legged parlor grand;
Play Wagner with terrific dash,
And 'Home, Sweet Home' with my left hand.
Also can I, whenever I please,
Variegate the general din,
Removing with dispatch and ease
Concertos from my violin:
I know talking, dancing, Kant,
Zoology and how to box,
And the name of every plant,
The solstices an l equinox.
The only things I do not know
Are how to cook and how to sew."

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

CREATION VOCAL WITH PRAISE.

(SELECTED.)

The Sun now mounts the heavens,
And wakes the cheerful spring;
Pours beauty o'er the mountains,
And makes the valleys ring.
Perfumes the joyous morning,
And gilds each parting cloud,—
The whole creation vocal
Proclaims its bliss aloud.

And shall the lower creatures,
With gratitude abound'
And man, the son of heaven,
Not lead the joyful sound?
Shall earth, and seas, and rivers,
With incense greet the sky,
And man with powers celestial,
Not pour HIS song on high?

No; with a soul immortal,
Descended from above,
I'll pour, with greatful fervor,
My ceaseless song of love;
I'll raise my soul to Heaven,
And join the sons of light,
To worship God, the fountain
Of every pure delight.

ANNUAL sessisons of the Legislature was defeated in the Senate.

THE bill to build a new capitol at the old cite in St. Paul has passed the Senate and is now ready for the Governor's signature.

LITCHFIELD voted against license by a majority of 67. If the blind pigs can be kept out in towns that go dry temperance will soon prevail at this rate.

DONNELLY let himself loose on Senator A. Y. Eaton's bill for "biennial" sessions and succeeded in tacking on an amendment making it "annual." by a vote of 21 to 8.

CARTER HARRISON has been elected to preside over Chicago as Mayor, for the fourth time. During the World's Fair this will be even a greater honor than on previous occasions.

MAJOR T. M. NEWSON, Consul at Malago, Spain, and one of Minnesota's oldest newspaper men, died at his post after a few days' illness with small-pox, on Good Friday, March 31.

FROM latest reports no reapportionment bill will pass, consequently the man that favors separation of Sherburne from Wright county next election will, doubtless carry Sherburne county a whooping.

SENATOR DONNELLY succeeded in having an "Initiative and Referendrum" resolution passed. This has the appearance of being a good plan. It is modeled after Switzerland's law and allows any voter to present for passage a bill to the legislature. And also, provides for referring all important bills to the people before they become law.

THE fact that the State Senate is the largest in the union is given as an excuse for reducing its membership. We think it will be a hard matter to pass a bill through that body abolishing the Senatorial district of any member of that body. Our Senator A. Y. Eaton objects to even cutting his field down a little by taking Sherburne away from us as ought to be done.

THE appointment as Assistant Superintendent of Bayard T. Shayer, a Republican, by the Democratic county Superintendent, J. F. Lewis, in Hennepin county did not meet with the approval of the county commissioners and at their last Monday's meeting they voted again to postpone the endorsement of his appointment for another month. Mr. L. has been asked to make another selection for the office of assistant which if he does from among the eligible Democrats will probably have better luck in getting approved.

THE appointment of Judge Lochren to the office of Commissioner of Pensions, is one which meets the approval of all who know him. And in this judicial district, where he has presided for so long, he is well and favorably known and the greatest regret among us is, that we are obliged to give up so good a judge from the bench. He served in the late war, and was one of the 262 men of the gallant Minnesota 1st Reg. Vol. that charged at Gettysburg where 215 of them were killed or wounded. No one knows better than he, who needs a pension, and how much. He will make a good and faithful officer and Minnesota, and especially the 4th Judicial District are proud of this appointment.

NEXT Thursday throughout the land will be observed the anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, the father of Democracy in the United States. He was born 150 years ago. His life was a prominent part of the history of our country. He wrote the declaration of Independence, at the risk of his life, and continued, to the time of his death, to aid in preserving the principles therein set fourth. Was President of the nation which he did so much to make free, and independent, for two terms. This, the time when his principles have received the hearty endorsement of the country, is a fit time in which to remember the day of his birth. As we said last week no more fitting observance of the day could be held in our county than the establishing of a Wright County Jefferson Club, which will do its best to aid in preserving to our people their dearly bought rights.

Anti-Patent Medicine Bill.

The bill introduced into the Legislature recently by Hon. John Boylan requiring the formula to be printed on patent medicine and that no false or misleading statement be printed on the bottle or package, has touched a tender cord in a few people's make up, and the country is being flooded with letters from wholesale dealers and from newspapers who depend on such advertisments for the greater part of their sustenance asking people to importune their members in the legislature and senate to use their influence to defeat the measure, and claiming that if the bill pass, it would stop more than $200,000 a year from coming into Minnesota and it would deprive the poor man's family (where there is no doctor) of the medicines which relieve suffering and often save life." Is it of no account to place against this latter statement the fact, well known to every medical man in the state though he may occasionally, prescribe some cure all, himself, that many people depend on the very high recommendations stuck on these bottles or packages or printed in these newspapers, in some acute attack, until the disease has run through its premonitory symptoms, and not knowing what the matter was have given medicine that did no good, or maybe, did actual damage? Will not medical men as a rule tell you that more lives are sacrificed each year by depending on patent medicines than are saved by them? As for people living where there is no doctor, such places are not very plenty now-a-days, and where there is a drug store run according to law the proprietor keeps, and knows enough to dispense remedies to relieve suffering until medical aid can be summoned. Would not the people of our state save $200,000 themselves and have less sickness and fewer sudden, and mysterious deaths if this law passed? And would not there be less of the frightful stories advertised in newspapers and less falsehoods to answer for, if the bill passes? Let her pass.

Tariff Pictures.

The skilled pearl button worker who made $10 a week before the McKinley law passed was a lucky fellow. Since then he has been making $25

a week, and even more. The pearl button duty is doomed to be one of the first victims of the coming free trade tariff.—New York Press.

The Press further says in speaking on the subject "At least 5,000 or 6,000 persons found employment at wages ragging from $7. a week for boys to $30. for the most skilled hands, and averaging about $20 a week for all classes of labor. This change was due directly and solely to the new tariff," and "even under the present substantial duty nearly $500,000 worth of pearl and shell buttons was imported last year—convincing proof that the tariff should be increased rather than diminished if the interests of American labor are to be subserved."

How many Wright county citizens ever see a pearl button now-a-days? What becomes of all this vast number manufactured and imported? If there was not so much tariff could not people use them as they did before the McKinley bill came into effect?

ST. LOUIS, March 31.—A peculiar cow disease has broken out in St. Louis county which is giving the farmers and others who own cows much concern. The disease makes its appearance in the cow's tail, and causes a sort of paralysis, which, if not promptly handled, will result disastrously to the animal. Dairy Inspector La Barge speaking of the disease, said he could not give the name of it, but knew it was not a new disorder.

But keep the baseball, and, likewise.
The football championship.

For while we're champions at these games,
On Fortune's brightest road we'll jog.
And keep about four thousand names
Upon the catalogue.

So let the student play lacrosse,
And punch the lively bag with vim.
And, like the airy albatross,
Along the race track skim.

The college then, through bats and balls,
Will gain and hold a standard high,
Till boys will gladly to its walls
From regions distant fly.

And crowded to its utmost brick
'T will grow and grow much larger yet,
When from the students we can pick
A man to beat Corbett.

REFERENDUM SYSTEM.

Information Asked of the Attorney General Concerning It.

The unexpected is continually happening. Senator Donnelly surprised his colleagues yesterday by introducing a resolution instructing the attorney general to prepare and present to the next legislature a report setting forth the history of the principle of "the initiative and the referendums:" and its workings in Switzerland; and how far it could be made applicable to existing conditions in this state and what effect in his judgment such a change would make in legislation in this state toward lessening corporate interference in the same and preventing extravagance and corruption.

In introducing the resolution Mr. Donnelly said he did so at the request of numerous people. The principle is approved by the Farmers' alliance and labor organizations. He worded it as it was in order that the proposition, which is a novel one, may come before the people for discussion and consideration and that the next legislature may be prepared to act upon the matter. After Senator Dean had accorded his approval the resolution was adopted.—St. Paul Globe.

For The Boys.

The great men come out of cabin as a rule. Columbus was a weaver, Haley was a soapmaker, Homer was a beggar, and Franklin, whose name will live while lightening blazes on a cloud, came from a printers desk.

Fifteen years ago I rode horseback through Hardin and La Rue counties, Kentucky. We called that the land of the ticks and lizards. The soil is very poor, so poor that it will not raise black-eyed peas unless you take them without the eyes.

Riding along that day I came upon a spot of rank weeds, where the soil had been made rich by the decay of an old cabin that once stood there.

Out of that cabin, years ago, came a lean, lank, white-headed boy. If ever a boy came from abject poverty, that one did. When only seven years of age he would walk to Hodgenville with a basket of eggs to sell. The boys laughed. They said his clothes were like Joseph's because of so many colors. But he was industrious, honest and sober. After a while he was old enough to leave home, so he went down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers on a flatboat. Then he returned, and crossing over into Indiana, he there split rails awhile; then on to Illinois, where he practiced laws; then on to the presidential chair. And in his death he bore the shackles of four million slaves and linked his name with that of liberty. I thank God that we live in a land where a boys can go from a towpath, tanyard, or a railcut to the presidency of a republic!—George W. Bain.

Work on the new school-house will soon begin. Although a two-story building was decided upon at the last meeting there is a growing sentiment among the tax-payers in favor of the one-story edifice proposed by Julius Hardt, and it is not improbable that the plan will be changed again ere long. Mr. Hardt has been a member of the Maple Plain school board for nearly fifteen years and has given much careful thought to our educational wants. He is usually right in whatever he proposes for the district, and if the people would sustain him it were better for all concerned. James R. Taggart, the well-known Minneapolis architect, has been out to consult with the school board about the matter, and he advises the erection of a one-story building.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 31, 1893.

President Cleveland, if one may judge from his remarkable career, needs no "mascot" to bring him "good luck," but an old Jacksonian democrat—Andrew Jackson Long, of Cedar Hill, Tennessee—doubtless with the feeling that it is impossible for a President, or anybody else, to have too many "good luck" bringers, through Representative Washington, presented him with a "mascot," in the form of a silver half dollar, minted in the year of the President's birth—1837—which Mr. Cleveland accepted in the same spirit with which it was given, and in due course of time he will formally acknowledge the gift in an authograph letter to Mr. Long, which will probably be more highly prized than the best office at the President's disposal.

That Secretary Gresham intends to be the actual head of his department was proven by his promptness in demanding the resignation of Dr. F. O. St. Clair, who has been Chief of the Consular Bureau under the last three administrations, for having withheld certain information concerning a U. S. consul from the Secretary. There are a number of old bureau chiefs in the other departments who deserve to be made to walk the plank for the same reason. These men have been in office so long that they have arrogated to themselves authority which belongs only to the head of the department, and the dismissal would be for the good of the service in more respects than one. In fact, there are few men who can remain in a responsible government office for a long term of years without forgetting that they are servants, instead of masters. New men and new methods are wanted in every branch of the government service, as must soon become apparent to the member of the cabinet who examines into the details of his department, and the indications are that that is now being more thoroughly done than ever before.

Removing a U. S. consual by cable is very seldom resorted to by the Department of State, but it was done in one case this week by Secretary, Gresham, and the man removed got just what he deserved. The reasons for Secretary Gresham's action are, in short, as follows: In the early part of the Presidential campaign William R. Sorsby, of Mississippi, was acting as Congressman Catching's private secretary, and taking advantage of his position he abstracted certain papers containing important facts relating to the democratic plans for the campaign from the private desk of Mr. Catching and gave them to Mr. Thomas H. Carter, chairman of the Republican National committee. In November last Sorsby was appointed U. S. Consul General at Guayaquil, Ecquador, a position which pays $3,000 a year; presumably as a reward for his treachery to Representative Catchings and the democratic party. As soon as these facts were brought to the attention of President Cleveland and Secretary Gresham, Sorsby was dismissed by cable, and Mr. George E. Dillard, of Mississippi, nominated to the vacancy.

So far from the nomination of Dr. Joseph S. Senner, of New York, to be Commissioner of Immigration at New York, which went to the Senate this week, having been secured by the steamship influence, as republicans are alleging, it was made in direct opposition to that influence. The contest for the position has been quite spirited there having been a number of candidates all strongly backed. In order to ascertain the sentiments of the steamship men towards each of the applicants Secretary Carlisle had a trusty personal friend call on them for the purpose of discussing the fitness of the several candidates, and as soon as his report was made the name of every men the steamship men had expressed themselves as being favorably inclined towards was stricken from the list of possibilities.

Secretary Hoke Smith is giving the bureau chiefs of the Interior Department some new ideas about the service they owe the Government. Instead of their leaving the department daily at 4 o'clock, as the ordinary clerks do, and as they have been in the habit of doing, they are compelled to remain until 5 o'clock, the additional hour being devoted to a conference with the Secretary on the current business before their several bureau. There is some kicking among the chiefs, but as most of them are republicans it is done very quietly. Secretary Smith has already earned the sobriquet of "the steam engine" among the emloyes of his department.

It is not often that a new official is so well fitted to assume his duties as ex-Congressman Stump, of Maryland, who is to be Superintendent of Immigration, a position to which he was this week nomineted. He was nominated. He was chairman of the House committee on Immigration during the last Congress and is the author of the new immigration law, which, by the way, would never would have gotten through the House if it had not been for his untiring efforts in the behalf.

After the Senator disposes of the cases of the appointed Senators, now under discussion, it will take up the resolution providing for an investigation of the charge of embezzlement against Senator Roach.

A New Newspaper.

Some Minneapolis capitalists are contemplating the establishment of a weekly newspaper in that city, the initial number to be issued sometime in June. The purpose of the new paper will be to chronicle the events of the day that may be of interest to the people of the outlying districts round about Minneapolis. Its politics will be Democratic, and it will be edited by William Kennedy, the Maple Plain school teacher. The name of the paper will be The Rural Voice.

A Novel Idea.

A helping hand visitor's club has been established which is quite a novel and ingenious idea. In the cities are many young women, who earn their living or are attending school who would be glad to have a few week's recreation in the country during summer months, and whose means do not admit of their doing so, and who would cheerfully help sew, or do housework enough to earn their board. On the other hand many farmers families lack help just at this season of the year, and would be happy to have some one to help them for a few weeks to catch up their work. If they only had some one to sew a little each day or even to mind the children they would furnish them a nice room and give them all they could eat, of the best the farm affords. The object of the helping Hand Visitor's Club is to bring these two persons together and have them mutually benefited, making two persons happy for a short time at least. For further information write to the Secretary of Helping Hand Visitors' Club, 15 East Fourteenth Street, New York, enclosing a stamped envelope for reply.

THE world has reclaimed about 40,000,000 acres of land by irrigation. India has 25,000,000 acres, Egypt 6,000,000, Europe 5,000,000, and the United States 4,000,000. But the United States is only a beginner and will yet cause many millions of acres of arid or semi-arid lands to blossom as the rose as population crowds the fertile portions of the country.

SOME idea of the extent of office seeking may be gathered from the statistics relating to fourth-class post offices. Of these there are over 68,000. It has been estimated that an average of ten applicants exist for each office. This would make an aggregate of 680,000. This seems incredible, and when one takes into consideration that there is a vast number of other offices with perhaps a greater average number of applicants astonishment is increased.

NEW YORK spiritualists have arranged a big celebration in Carnegie hall on July 2 of the anniversary of the celebrated Rochester rappings. Mrs. Fox-Kane, who did some of this rapping, confessed in 1888 that the raps were produced by the Fox sisters cracking their toe joints, ability to do which they discovered accidentally. They practiced the trick until they became proficient in toe-cracking, and then they set about fooling the world. It took some time toe-nail this lie.

"NO LIVING germ of disease can resist the antiseptic power of essence of cinnamon for more than a few hours," is the conclusion announced by M. Even the scent of it is fatal to microbes, and M. Chamberland says a decoction of cinnamon should be taken freely by persons living in places affected by typhoid or cholera.

PHILADELPHIA has been called the "Sleepy City," but it has awakened and is to inaugurate an electric railroad to New York. A speed of from 75 to 90 miles an hour is looked for. The power will be furnished by two stations, one in Philadelphia and one in New York, with duplicate sets of engines, boilers and generators at each to guard against delay by accident to the machinery.

ROSETTA WASHINGTON, a diminutive mass of wrinkles, backed by a negro complexion, called at Mayor Tyler's office in Louisville to ask for a supply of coal, and got it after telling her story. She said she wanted a little coal to keep warm by until her "little girl," 87 years old, could get well. She is 130 years old, has had two husbands, and her 87-year-old girl has one son living. He is 37 years old, and the last of twenty-six children born to her little daughter. The old woman looks the age she claims, and says that she spent a short period of her life in Louisiana, having lived there sixty years.

NEXT to the gold brick swindle, the "green goods" game is the gauziest of all frauds, yet it is the most popular. It seems to have a fascination even for men who must have read repeated exposures of the trick, for often we read of city men presumably well acquainted with the shams of the world "going against" the green goods even as the charmed bird goes against the jaws of the snake. The money fooled away in this manner must amount to an enormous sum, for cases that find their way into print represent a stealage of from $5,000 to $10,000 per week, but an infinitesimal proportion of the total.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES.

Items Regarding the Doings of Legislators at the Capitol.

It is evident that the legislature intends to make its work against the coal combine as far-reaching as possible. The following is the text of the last bill introduced by consent of the governor on the subject:

A joint resolution in reference to an interstate conference as to a certain unlawful coal combination or trust.

Whereas, Certain railroad corporations and coal mine owners of Pennsylvania and other states have united in an unlawful combination or trust to prevent competition and maintain the prices of coal at an unreasonable rate, and have for that purpose spread their monopoly over all the northern states of this union, plundering the people thereof of millions of dollars annually; and

Whereas, It is difficult for any one state to contend alone successfully with this gigantic interstate conspiracy and fully overthrow such a widespread evil, but the powers of all the states and of the national government must be invoked for the protection of the people of the entire country, therefore be it

Resolved, By the legislature of the state of Minnesota, that the governor of Minnesota is respectfully requested to correspond with the governors of all the northern and western states, as well as with the governors of the states of Kentucky, Virginia, West Virginia, Delaware and Maryland, and request them to appoint commissioners to meet on the first Monday of June, of this year, at such place as the said governors may agree upon, to confer together and formulate such remedial measures as may be necessary to abate this great evil, and submit the same to their respective states and to the next congress of the United States for their consideration and action; and to take all other steps which they may deem wise and proper for the prosecution of the members of said unlawful combination in their respective states; and, be it further

Resolved, That the governor of this state is hereby authorized to appoint five commissioners, citizens of this state, who shall represent this state at such conference. They shall be entitled to receive the sum of $5 per day for the time actually spent in such conference, and their actual expenses to be paid upon vouchers submitted by the governor by the state treasurer, upon the warrants of the state auditor, and there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury, not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500, to pay the per diem and expenses of the said commissioners; and, be it further

Resolved, That in case all the governors of the states referred to neglect or decline to appoint any such commissioners, that then the commissioners appointed by and for this state shall meet and propose such measures as they may think proper for the consideration and action of congress.

The bill to create the office of land and immigration agent was reported back to the house by the committee on public lands with a substitute which changes the bill only in the specification of details. Friends of the measure say that the new office will not entail any additional expense, as it provides for a division of the work now performed by the auditor, so that the duties of land commissioner, which he now performs, shall be performed by the commissioner provided for in the bill.

Senator Tawney's bill authorizing municipal corporations to issue bonds to aid in the construction of canals and improvement of waterways the same in a similar way to the method now authorized in the construction of railroads, went through the senate with only two negative votes, Craig and Brown. The bill is S. F. 353. When it came up Senator Tawney explained its provisions at length, claiming that the development of canals and waterways to compete with railway transportation will solve the freight problem by furnishing direct competition with the railroads.

Senator Donnelly said that for 25 years he had been urging the construction of a canal from Taylor's Falls to Duluth. The river could readily be made navigable to Taylor's Falls and for about 100 miles north of that point the St. Croix river could be cleared of logs and rocks and be made navigable for large-sized canal boats; and this would leave a little more that 50 miles of canal to build over a swampy country, amply supplied with water on the water-shed. The construction of such a work would unite the Mississippi valley system with the great lakes and create unbroken water communication from the Gulf of Mexico by way of Duluth to the Atlantic ocean.

It was reported that the friends of the capitol bill had determined to urge a change in the location of the site. The site now talked of is at the head of Wabasha street, on the high ground where the interurban street car line bends from Wabasha off toward Rice street. By selecting this site the old capitol could be used during the construction of the new one.

A delegation of ladies representing the Women's World's Fair Auxiliary association swooped down on the senate with a bill establishing a state flag. The delegation consisted of Miss F. L. Greenleaf and Mrs. H. F. Brown, Minneapolis; Mrs. A. F. Stebbins, Rochester, and Mrs. A. A. White of Moorhead. Senator Donnelly introduced the bill in a happy speech. He referred to the reputation for gallantry the senate had earned by passing the woman's suffrage bill, and asked that the bill be passed under suspension of the rules. He said the design is one of singular beauty and propriety, and one that appeals to one's sense of the beautiful. The bill was passed under suspension of the rules.

Over to the house it was sent and given to the care of Bob Dunn, who in a short speech of well rounded periods paid his compliments to the ladies of the state. A suspension of the rules was secured and the bill passed without opposition.

The anti-scalpers' bill, which has been missing for some time, and which its enemies hoped was dead, bobbed up serenely in the house in the form of a request from its author, Mr. Vansant, of Winona, that a copy of the original bill be passed under suspension of the rules. This developed considerable discussion and objection, principally from those who oppos d the measure on its first passage. Before the motion to suspend the rules was put a call of the house was ordered. The rules were suspended and the measure passed by an increased majority.

In urging the passage of the coal combine bill, Mr. Donnelly said the more the committee delved into the investigation the more they became impressed with the injustice to the people, and especially the poor people, in making an unnatural high price on coal. He also said the combine was crippling the manufacturers of the state that depend on cheap coal, and if not checked would eventually result in rendering our manufacturers unable to compete with the east. He called attention to the small appropriation asked for by the measure.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Doings of the State Law Makers at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, March 30.—In the senate the bill for free public libraries was reported back with amendments and recommended to pass. The rules were suspended and the bill passed. The bill to enforce the payment of delinquent taxes was also passed under suspension of the rules. Senator Donnelly's bill for the establishment of a state flag was passed. At the afternoon session the bill relating to printing and distribution of laws was discussed and finally passed. Streissguth's reassessment measure, known as the Sibley county drainage bill, was lost. Lommen's bill appropriating $25,000 for opening the closed water courses of the Red river valley was taken from general orders and placed upon final passage. It was passed by a vote of 41 to 3.

The house had most of its time taken up with the hearing of committee reports. By request of the governor Mr. Markham introduced a substitute for H. F. 761, lost, rights of way to railroads over state parks. It provides for rights of way and depot grants for any road building across the state parks. The rules were suspended and the bill passed.

The house concurred in the senate amendment to H. F. 122, refunding of liquor licenses in certain cases, and re-passed the bill. It relates to the town of Litchfield, and with the signature of the governor is a law.

The following house bills were passed: Legalizing the organization of certain corporations; jurisdiction of justices of the peace; powers of district courts over corporations; powers of county commissioners; punishment of boys under 16 years; relating to willful trespass, and Minnesota reformatory.

ST. PAUL, March 31.—In the senate the bill prepared by the election commission was presented. The bill changing the time for holding court in Hubbard county was reported back and passed under suspension of rules. The bill to enforce the payment of delinquent taxes was discussed for an hour and then temporarily laid over. Senator Leavitt's bill providing for publication of the statements of state treasurer in the newspapers of the state was after discussion passed under suspension of rules. An attempt to pass the bill for a special tax, to maintain the state university, under suspension of rules failed. The following bills were passed: Amending the law taxing iron mines; taxing the gross earnings of sleeping car, telegraph and express companies; increasing the number of boiler inspector districts; the delinquent tax bill.

In the house Mr. Horton, by consent, offered the joint resolution to congress, from the St. Paul chamber of commerce, for digging a deep water-way canal, and on his motion the rules were suspended and the resolution passed.

The rest of the morning was spent in committee of the whole. When the committee rose a fight ensued over the adoption of the report recommending the indefinite postponement of the bill exempting church property from taxation.

Mr. Bjorge of Otter Tail moved to adopt the report on the bill. A call of the house was demanded, and then, on only eight unexcused absentees disclosed, was dispensed with. The question was taken by ayes and nays, on the adoption of the report, indefinitely postponing the bill, and it prevailed, 52 to 33.

In the afternoon the bill placing express companies under state control was taken under consideration. The debate was at times quite acrimonious, but the measure was finally recommended for passage. The election bill was not disposed of when the house adjourned.

ST. PAUL, April 1.—In committee of the whole this afternoon the senate decided to recommend the passage of the bill providing for annual sessions of the legislature, unlimited as to length, and a salary for members of $500 per annum. The debate on the bill was long and interesting. The original bill fixed the salary at $1,000.

The following bills were passed: Relating to net fishing in international waters; amending the law relating to delinquent taxes, requiring costs to be added in publishing amounts; requiring notice to be given of unpaid personal property tax; appropriating $200,000 for a state elevator at Duluth; permitting the appropriation for tubs and pails to be used for the manufacture of binding twine at the Stillwater prison.

In the house Mr. Walsh, of the coal combine investigating committee called up S. F. 386, on interstate conference. Amended to extend the conference to all the states, and the number of commissioners increased from 5 to 10, and the per diem compensation stricken out; recommended to be passed without further consideration. The committee's report was adopted, and the rules were suspended and the joint memorial was passed. This amendment was agreed to by the senate. The morning hour was spent in attempting to advance bills out of regular order, consequently nothing was done. In the afternoon the Winston election bill was discussed and recommended to pass. Hereafter house sessions will begin at 9 a. m.

ST. PAUL, April 3.—The senate held an evening session only. Tawney's bill fixing the salary of supreme court reporter at $3,500 was passed by a vote of 30 to 6. The house bill providing for a survey of the water courses in the northern part of the state was passed under suspension of the rules. Other bills were passed, as follows: Creating a board of supervision of farmers' institutes; prohibiting trap shooting when live birds are used; authorizing cities to issue bonds for public improvement.

The attempt of the house to hold earlier morning sessions was unsuccessful. At the 9 o'clock roll call only 18 members answered to their names. The call of the house was resorted to, and after an hour 53 members were reported in their seats. Two of these skipped out, leaving 51—seven short of a quorum.

In the afternoon the session was well nigh profitless. In committee of the whole only two bills were recommended to pass, the Wyman child labor bill and the Stevens road and cartway bill. The knife was applied to four bills. The par value insurance policy bill was debated for two hours and a motion to recommend it to pass was lost by a tie vote. By request of the governor a new seed grain bill was introduced and passed under suspension.

The Ongstad bill, providing that public officials who receive a free pass from the railroads shall forfeit their office and be punished by a term in the state prison, was indefinitely postponed.

Where Marriage Comes High.

A young man laughingly remarked: "Oh, yes, I could afford to get married; that's cheap; but I don't know that I could afford to get unmarried again, for that comes pretty high." That young man ought to live in Spanish Honduras for awhile, and he would not talk so slightingly of the expense of getting married. The unfortunate natives have to be twice married before the knot is considered sufficiently tied. The civil marriage is absolutely necessary, as it is the only one the state recognizes. The religious marriage is equally necessary, as it is the only one the church recognizes. Of course this is true in many Catholic countries, but in Honduras there is a fee of twenty dollars to be paid for each ceremony, and the native Hondurian is generally miserably poor. Forty dollars looks as big there as four hundred dollars does here, consequently marriage is not very much a la mode in Honduras.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Maj. Newson Dead.

A report reached St. Paul that Maj Thomas M. Newson, the veteran Minnesota newspaper man, had died of smallpox at Malaga, Spain, where he has been the American consul since 1890.

Maj. Thomas McLean Newson was born in New York City, where his father, Gen. Newson, was commander of a military company, on Feb. 22, 1822. His grandfather was paymaster on Governor's island during the war of 1812.

It was in 1853 that he came to St. Paul and engaged as associate editor of the old Pioneer, then edited by Maj. Joseph R. Brown. He remained in this position until spring, when he started the St. Paul Daily and Weekly Times, which he continued for seven years. It was staunchly republican in politics and its editor was prominent in the party councils. He was the sole delegate from Minnesota when the party was organized at Pittsburg, and was associated on its committees with Horace Greeley, Abijah Mann, Henry J. Raymond and Joshua R. Giddings. He strongly supported Lincoln and stumped the state in his behalf.

A Rich Pauper.

The police of St. Paul placed under arrest for a violation of the ordinance relative to begging, an old gray haired man, who gave the name of Joseph R. Sutter. When searched at the station, Sutter's pockets were found to contain a large quantity of silver coin, contributions from charitable citizens, a valuable gold watch and chain, a bank book showing $1,500 to the credit of the bearer, certificates of deposit in a New York bank to the value of $20,000, a roll of bills aggregating $165, and a few other valuables. The old man said he had not tasted food for two days. In one pocket was found a dry bun which was crumbling to pieces. He said that he got it when he went into a cheap restaurant for a 15-cent meal. He carried the bun away with him to eat when he became hungry. Telegrams from New York say he is John Sutter, well known and an inventor. His sanity is questioned.

Rhodes Arrested.

Another step was taken in the coal combine matter by the arrest of John J. Rhodes on the charge of perjury. Mr. Rhodes anticipated his prosecutors, and surrendered himself to Sheriff Chapel, of Ramsey county, who took him at once to the chambers of Judge Cory, where he waived examination and asked that he be allowed to give bail for his appearance at the May term of court. Bail was fixed at $5,000, and a bond signed by Cashier E. H. Bailey, of the First National bank, and Charles A. F. Morris, the engineer, was soon accepted by the court. Rhodes was again at liberty.

Tired of Life.

John Erickson, a retired saloon keeper at Duluth, blew his brains out with a 38-calibre revolver. Liquor is the only cause assigned. Erickson was 50 years old. He leaves a wife and two children. An envelope marked, "Not to be opened until I am dead," contained notes receivable aggregating $1,500, indorsed over to Mrs. Erickson, and three checks for $2,000 on the State bank.

Killed by Cars.

Emil Grenke, a laborer, was killed by the Chicago Great Western motor in the yards near the Annapolis street station, Minneapolis. He was walking upon one of the tracks and was forced by an incoming train to the other track, where he did not see the approaching motor. He was terribly mangled, but was still alive when picked up and was taken to the city hospital, where he died.

An Incendiary.

The high school and adjoining primary building, with the library and contents, at Pipestone, were burned to the ground. The building was one mass of flames when discovered, and with a hard south wind it took the united efforts of the fire department to save property in the vicinity. Loss is $20,000, insured for $10,000. The fire no doubt was the work of an incendiary.

Vernon Hicks of Fairmont was attacked by a bull dog and one of his legs terribly lacerated.

John S. Pillsbury has filed an action in the Duluth courts against W. K. Twomey and wife to force the defendants to give a clear title to land valued at $50,000. The plaintiff alleges fraud in the transaction in which Henry W. Fuller and the defendants are interested.

A great sensation has been caused at Redwood Falls by finding Ned Mulloy, a well known laborer, in his hut, two miles north of the city, dead. When found he was sitting on the bed with a jackknife at his feet.

The residence of ex-Mayor Silks in West St. Paul was burned. Loss, $5,000.

While taking lumber from a band saw at Milaca, Torinas Nordseth got his hands in the cage, necessitating amputation.

A VENETIAN WALLFLOWER.

Floating along a quaint Venetian street,
An old, old woman, laid upon the shelf,
I felt how much life's bitter mars its sweet,
And foolishly kept thinking of myself.

While vanquished day its sunset banner furled,
I pondered o'er forgotten hopes and fears,
And thought perhaps too hardly of the world,
For patience does not always grow with years.

High on the right there towered an old stone wall
Gay with a century's disregarded growth,
Where wallflowers held their gaudy festival,
Some red, some yellow, and some tinged with both.

From out the crumbling stones with flowers arrayed
A little window could my course command;
And o'er the sill smiled a Venetian maid,
And leaned her pensive head upon her hand.

Her softly lustrous hair as dark as night,
Her features lighted by a thoughtful smile,
She turned her splendid eyes to left and right,
And hummed an old Venetian air the while.

Her brilliant cheeks and red lips just apart
Lit by the low sun's slowly dying flame,
She sat so still she seemed a work of art,
With old gray stone and wallflowers for a frame.

She saw me, and she seemed to know my dower
Of grief and loneliness and selfish woe,
And with a sudden impulse plucked a flower
And tossed it to me as I passed below.

The breeze had died away. The blossom dropped,
Fluttered, and wavered; it was falling wide;
A tiny zephyr caught it up, then stopped,
And brought the flower directly to my side.

I feebly waved my poor old wrinkled hand;
Her pretty features lighted up at this;
She said some words I could not understand,
And laughed, and threw me down a little kiss.

And then somehow this dark world grew more bright;
And I could see with dim eyes strangely clear
How grim old time can smile in swiftest flight
And somber fate forget to be severe.

I love to think that you remember, too,
Sweet girl so far away across the sea,
And while I wave this grateful hand to you,
Perhaps you throw another kiss to me.

MR. BOYD'S BAD HABIT.

The Means His Wife Used to Cure Him of It.

Mrs. Boyd's eyes were wet with tears.

"Indeed, Robert," she sobbed, "it breaks my heart to hear you say those dreadful words! It is bad enough for you to do so at your office, but a great deal worse in your own home—and at breakfast too!" cried the better half of Robert L. Boyd, Esq., attorney and counselor at law.

"There, there, my dear, don't take it so hard if I happen to let a cuss word slip now and then!"

"'Now and then,' indeed! It is considerably oftener than 'now and then.' I know you don't care a bit for me, or you would at least refrain from using such language in my presence!"

"Now, my love, you make a great mistake. You are the very dearest little parcel of humanity in the world to me; so dry your eyes, and let's finish our breakfast," said Mr. Boyd, looking just a little sorry (for he did not like to see his pretty wife in tears), and, to a close observer, just a trifle amused.

"Oh, yes, you are always ready to stop talking when we are on this subject; but just let me ask you one question. If we had company this morning, especially any young lady, do you think for an instant that you would have given way to your temper in the manner you did, and used such language?"

"W-e-l-l, my dear, you know"—he began.

"Answer me!" she demanded.

"Well, my dear, since you are so very persistent, I will say I don't think I should, at least not unless"—

He did not get a chance to finish, for Mrs. Boyd interrupted him quickly: "Which all goes to prove that you respect more and care more for the opinion of anyone who chances to breakfast with us than you do for your own wife!" and her sobs began again.

"Now really, my dear," began her husband, as he placed his arm around her, and lifting her tear-stained face to his, imprinted thereupon a regular lover's kiss. "you are a little unjust to a fellow. You know I love and respect my own little wife more than any soul on earth, but then, my dear, it relieves a man a great deal—when he is under any strain or excitement of his feelings—to swear a little. It is such a strong yet brief and concise way of expression that it gives instantaneous relief. However, I will endeavor to quit it for your sake; so kiss me again, and let me see a happy smile before I go to the office."

Mr. Boyd was not a bad or a vicious man, and he meant no harm at all when he swore a "blue streak," as he called it; but to his sensitive little partner this was a dreadful vice. She had talked a great deal to him about it, and always got about as much satisfaction out of Mr. Boyd as on this particular morning. She made up her mind to give him a week to try to mend his ways, and then, if that failed, she determined upon a dreadful plan.

She anxiously waited to see the result of her last effort, but the days rolled by and the change was not noticeable. At the end of the week her heart failed her, and she said to herself that she would give him one more day's grace. That evening at tea Mr. Boyd said:

"Nellie, do you remember my telling you about a schoolmate of mine, Alfred Newton? Well, I received a note to-day from him, and he is coming through here to-morrow on his way to the coast, and we must entertain him. I want to show him my wife, and make him disgusted with his bachelorhood. What do you say, dear?"

"I shall be delighted to meet your friend, and will do what I can to make his short stay with us pleasant." And so they arranged a pretty luncheon, a drive, a dinner and a theater party in the evening. Mr. Boyd was in high spirits, and swore a little more than usual, "just to express myself, my dear," and next morning met his friend in a hearty way.

"Well, Al, old boy, I am right glad to see you,——me if I ain't!"

"Thanks, and I am most happy to see you again, my dear fellow. Of course I am anxious to meet that charming wife of yours, too. Have you got her under as fine control as you always thought you had the boys at school?" laughed his friend.

"Oh, yes," said Boyd. "Ours is a model home, I can tell you. Nothing ever goes wrong; all is as agreeable and as smooth as clock-work. Come, I am anxious to prove my assertions; let's go at once." And so saying, they started for Mr. Boyd's home.

Mr. Newton was charmed with his friend's lovely wife, and congratulated him heartily on his success in securing such a dear little woman. It made him feel lonely to think of the difference in their positions. When he was at home, it was in a hotel, a "swell" one, to be sure, but here was his friend in a snug, pretty little home of his own, with a beautiful companion of whom he was so proud and who looked at her husband with such love shining out of her big blue eyes that it went straight to his heart, and he resolved to get married on the first opportunity.

Mrs. Boyd left the gentleman, to give some orders about lunch, and meditated thus as she went. "He is certainly a very agreeable gentleman, and Robert is so anxious to show off that it is a shame; but it must be done, now or never," and her lips were set with a look of determination.

Luncheon was announced. They were all seated at the daintily spread table, and Mr. Boyd was thinking with satisfaction that things were running without a hitch and that his friend must be burning up with envy (it will be observed that Mr. Boyd was a trifle conceited), when his wife rang the bell. No one answered, and she rang again, remarking, as she did so, in a cool and steady manner: "That is the ——est girl I ever saw."

No painter could paint the look of surprise and horror that overspread her husband's face. He was so completely overcome that words were beyond him. His beautiful, good little wife! What had come over her? And in the presence of the very man of all men to whom he would have things appear to the best advantage! It made him wild. How vulgar it sounded! To say that Mr. Newton was surprised, too, expresses it but faintly. He was thunderstruck; but, like the gentleman he was, appeared not to notice it, and the meal went on. Poor little Mrs. Boyd! Her heart beat fast. The nasty word was out, and she was surprised at herself, too, for the cool way in which she said it; but she had made up her mind to do it or die, and do it she did.

Mr. Boyd tried to speak to her alone after luncheon, but could not find the opportunity, and so they all went to drive. All the time that dreadful word burned in Mr. Boyd's brain, but he tried to appear natural with his friend. His wife was in gay spirits, and entertained their guest by pointing out the objects of interest along their way. Arriving at home, she went immediately to her own room, and did not appear again until dressed for dinner, when she joined her husband and his friend, looking so sweet and pure that the friend forgot about the incident at lunch. Mr. Boyd was feeling a little better, too, and thought there was no danger of a repetition of his wife's offense; but he was mistaken, for as the servant handed her a dish of salad, it tipped slightly and soiled the table cloth.

"——it!" cried Mrs. Boyd. "What the devil do you want to be so careless for?" And, looking straight at Mr. Newton, she said in her sweet way, that contrasted so vividly with the language just used:

"I always swear when I am provoked. It is such a strong, yet brief and concise way of expressing one's feelings, and such a great relief, too. When Robbie (referring to their young hopeful) gets old enough, I shall teach him to swear. It is manly, and will give his youthful mind an excellent method of expression. I did not use to think so, but Mr. Boyd has so fully impressed this on my mind that I am convinced of the merits of being able to swear. What do you say, Mr. Newton?"

It is needless to say that Mr. Newton agreed with her, out of sheer politeness; but poor Boyd, Sr., was in a state bordering on insanity. The dreadful meal came to a close at last. The theater party was postponed (as Mr. Boyd was indisposed) and he drove his friend to the train. Mr. Newton thanked him for a most delightful day, and as he bade him good-by could not refrain from saying:

"Old man, you were mistaken. It is she who has controlled you!"

And so it was. Mrs. Boyd never had occasion to swear again, and Robert Boyd, Sr., didn't either.—Minneapolis Spectator.

PASTIMES FOR SOCIETY.

How to Make Enjoyable the Fashionable Hours.

They are playing a new game in London called telegram. The names of two distinguished people are given the players; with these a certain number of letters—twelve or more. The game is to write telegrams from one of these distinguished persons to the other in words beginning with each letter in turn and in the same order. The telegrams when written are handed in and read by a person duly appointed. This game is said to furnish the liveliest sort of opportunity for absurd fun. Certain indications, in the opinion of the New York Sun, seem to show that the hired entertainer is not so indispensable at private functions as he has been. A lady of originality and title in London is making herself a reputation for entertaining her friends with practical jokes. These are carefully arranged after the manner of Edward Sothern the first. On one occasion she gave a dinner and two of her guests were induced to dress up as policemen and appear at the right moment to confront her guests. At another time at the entrance of a certain guest the rest of a dinner company fell prostrate on the floor, apparently in a dead faint, where they lay for fully ten minutes. Incidents of this sort, in the opinion of experts, early in an entertainment will give impetus enough to carry a whole evening to a successful conclusion.

French Mail Line Show.

The department of transportation exhibits is advised that the French line mail steamers will make an interesting and attractive display in the French section. It will consist principally of six large paintings or dioramas representing: The entrance to New York harbor, with two of the company's steamers, and showing the statue of Liberty and Brooklyn bridge; "Going on Board at Havre," showing the dock with one steamer ready to go and taking passengers, baggage, etc., and a special train arriving from Paris; the dining-room of a steamer at night, lighted with electricity; the arrival of an African steamer in Marseilles; a view of Algiers, with blue sky and sea and steamer in harbor; the coast at Penhoct St. Nazaire, with two steamers in process of construction. These pictures were painted by Poilpot, Hofbaur, Montenard and Motte. The remaining portion of the exhibit will consist of models of the coast steamers. The exhibit will arrive the latter part of this month.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Brown Sauce: One-half pint of boiling hot, seasoned, brown gravy; add the juice of half a lemon, one lump of sugar, one onion stuck full of cloves; simmer ten minutes, thicken with brown flour, and strain. Serve at once.—Good Housekeeping.

—Custard Pudding: Put two layers of bread, thinly sliced and buttered, in a deep pudding dish. Sprinkle each layer with seeded raisins. Pour over it a quart of milk, into which have been stirred three eggs and a large cup of sugar. Bake until the custard is "set."—Detroit Free Press.

—Hominy Cakes: Wash a pint of small hominy very clean and boil it tender, add an equal quantity of corn meal, make it into a batter with eggs, milk and a piece of butter; bake it in cakes, like batter cakes on a griddle, and eat them hot with butter and honey or sirup.—London Black and White.

—Ginger Cake: One pint molasses, one-half pint lard, one-half pint sour milk, one tablespoonful of ginger, one tablespoonful of soda, flour to make a stiff batter. Stir stiff at night and set in a cool place till morning, then put plenty of flour on the molding board and roll without adding more flour.—Ohio Farmer.

—Prune Pie: Stew half a pound of prunes in a little water till very soft. Remove the stones, add sugar to taste, and mash until they are all broken. Beat the whites of two eggs stiff, and add gradually the prune pulp. Line a plate with crust, bake, and when nearly done, fill with the prune, and bake about fifteen minutes.—Boston Budget.

—Fried Apples: Remove the cores and wipe the skins of ripe tart apples, cut in even slices not more than half an inch thick and fry to a light brown in a pan containing a very little butter. Turn the slices at the proper moment, and when they are done lift them out, one at a time, with a pancake-turner, and arrange them attractively on a hot dish. They are to be eaten with roast spare-rib, pig, duck or goose, or with any kind of cold meat.—Delineator.

—Potato Croquettes: Season mashed potatoes highly with butter, pepper and salt, or add a little nutmeg, celery, salt or onion juice if you prefer. To each pint add two well beaten eggs and a teaspoonful of finely-minced parsley. Mix thoroughly, roll into oval croquettes, dip in beaten egg, roll in fine bread-crumbs and fry in smoking fat. Drain on paper and serve immediately on a warm platter.—Country Gentleman.

—Bisque of Lobster: Prepare, boil and open two hen lobsters; cut the meat into small pieces. Break the shells and small claws; put in a saucepan with a quart of boiling water. Pound and mix the spawn, the fat, part of the coral, two ounces of the lobster meat, an ounce of butter, and two of flour until reduced to a pulp. Strain the liquor from the saucepan over the pulp, gradually mixing it; season with a little salt and Cayenne, add the remainder of the meat, and the coral rubbed fine and serve immediately.—Harper's Bazar.

—Roast Beef Cooked in a Kettle: A pot roast should be put in boiling water and covered closely. It is a very good way to set it in a hot oven in an empty dripping pan for ten or fifteen minutes before putting it in the water; add salt, and keep the water boiling slowly for two hours or more until tender; then uncover and let the water cook out if there is too much grease, pour it off turn the roast over and let it brown on both sides; watch carefully, or it will burn; when tender and brown, take out on a platter; be careful to keep the roast whole; if there is too much fat, pour off and add a few spoonfuls of water to the gravy; let it brown and thicken with flour. The suet which cooks out of the meat should be strained and saved to cook with.—N. Y. Observer.

A Stylish Gown.

A recently-imported princesse gown has its many-gored breadths piped or overlaid with jetted gimp. A stylish costume is made of Venetian green ribbed cloth and golden-brown, velvet trimmed, with very narrow gold braid. The front gore opens to the depth of about three-quarters of a yard, revealing the plaits of a simulated velvet petticoat, and great fullness is given to the back of the slightly-trained skirt by the introduction of two cornet-shaped plaits of velvet that flare very much as they near the bottom of the skirt. The short waist has a still shorter Spanish jacket of the cloth with velvet revers edged with gold braid. The close-fitting cloth sleeves are finished at the top with large Hungarian caps of velvet, lined with green and brown shot silk and finished with rows of the braid. A handsome Breton cape to match is lined with green brocade and finished with three shoulder capes of brown velvet, edged with tiny curled filaments of peacocks' plumage. A large, full band of the same feathers encircles the neck.—Chicago Mail.

Points of Good Form.

When a street gown is worn for breakfast it is quite correct to retain it for the family dinner at noon: but a negligee morning wrapper does not look well and ill-health alone can excuse it. It can be worn for luncheon, as that is an informal meal; yet, by that hour, every healthy woman should be thinking of some outdoor exercise if she has not already done so, and would better be ready for it, attired in a simple-walking gown. Whether the evening meal is supper or dinner and the family wife quiet and even plain, it is a pretty custom—and a refining example for children—to dress for the occasion. Something bright and light then not only looks well, but cheers people. It is always good form to seal a letter with wax. Many devices are used for the seal, but nothing is better than a monogram or the initial of the surname. In the colors of wax fashion changes frequently; all delicate colors are now used. Red is relegated strictly to business.—Chicago Mail.

Ribbons for Muffs.

It is by the thousand and one extravagant little toilet trifles that the ultra-fashionable girl attains distinction in dress. There is a new mode in the wearing of muffs, even later than that of suspending the mug by a gold or silver chain set with pearls, and more genteel because less conspicuous. A regular muff-ribbon, with slides and clasps of solid silver to regulate its length, now takes the place of the chain, and is of dark brown satin or black to match the color of the fur. A bunch of fresh violets nestles in the fur of the muff, or one or two deep crimson roses may be worn.—Chicago Tribune.

AMUSING SIGNS AND ADS.

"PHYSIOGNOMICAL HAIRCUTTING" is the announcement of a Boston barber who is a little more than up to date in his methods. One's hair and beard are trimmed by him to suit the features.

THE sign over a Boston store reading: "Pickles and New York Sunday Papers" is outclassed by one recently discovered in a Georgia village which advertises "Ax Handles, Ink, Pens and Cheese."

SOME years ago in Vermont a widower who lost a little girl had the following epitaph placed on her tombstone: "Go sleep with ma, Alminy S. Soon pa will come and sleep with thee." Since then, however, he has buried three wives and is healthy yet.

THE following advertisement appeared recently in the London Morning Post: "A lonely gentlewoman, tired of adverse fate, capable of enjoying life, desires to be adopted by wealthy couple or old gentleman. She is cultured, of good appearance; would prove a trusty and agreeable companion, etc., etc."

IN a side street of an Italian town a sign hanging in front of a physician's office reads in part as follows: "The said Prof. Ricca will use for his salves in making them live snakes and large serpents, wolves, bears, monkeys, marmots, weasels and numerous other wild animals alive and in good condition."

PITH AND POINT.

SNOOPER—"I'd have you know I come of a good family." Ricketts—"You must have traveled a long distance."—Vogue.

WHIFFLER—"They tell me Sharpleigh made his entire fortune in less than a week. How did he do it?" Staples—"Cornered the Boston spectacle market."—Troy Press.

THE girl whose eyes are dazzled by an engagement ring can't be expected to see many faults in the giver. For the time it may be said she's stone blind.—Philadelphia Times.

"What is the difference between humor and nonsense?" said the inquisitive man. "Humor," replied the candid man, "is represented by the joke you make yourself; nonsense is represented by the joke some other fellow makes."—Washington Star.

"MR. GINGHAM," said Taper, "I would like a fortnight's absence to attend the wedding of a very dear friend." "It must be a very dear friend, indeed, to make you want that much time. Who is it?" "Well, sir, after the ceremony she will be my wife."—Tid-Bits.

SWORD AND GUN.

COL. BOYKIN and all the officers of Maryland's crack regiment, the Fifth, have resigned owing to trouble growing out of a conflict of authority at the inauguration of Cleveland.

THE extreme range, three hundred and sixty yards, of an English war bow of the middle ages was almost as great as the effective range, four hundred yards, of a musket in our Mexican war.

THIS is not a military country, and officers of the army and navy take care not to be found in uniform when off duty. The proper attire for a social affair of official character is, of course, full dress uniform, but no officer appears at a private gathering in such attire if he can avoid it.

CAPT. JOHN C. DOUGHERTY, of Jackson, Mich., is anxious to restore to friends of the owner a sword taken from a line officer of an Indiana or Illinois regiment who was killed at the battle of Malvern Hill. The only mark of identification to be found on the well-preserved sword is the initials "H. W. C." scratched on the butt of the handle.

INDUSTRIAL FIGURES.

IT is estimated that during the last five years the turpentine gatherers of Georgia have destroyed $200,000,000 worth of pine timber.

THE largest vineyard in the world, according to a correspondent, belongs to Senator Stanford, of California. It consists of 3,500 acres of bearing vines.

IN one of the Comstock mines a new water wheel is to be placed which is to run 1,150 revolutions a minute, and to have a speed at its periphery of 10,805 feet per minute. A greater head of water than has ever before been applied to a wheel will be used.

SPORTS AND SPORTSMEN.

AN observant sporting man of New York notes that of the two doctors Austin Flint, the younger is now offering the heavier odds. The sign of one reads: "Dr. Austin Flint, 10 to 1," that of the other: "Dr. Flint Jr., 11 to 1."

A SHOEMAKER has a card in his window reading: "Any respectable man, woman or child can have a fit in this store."—Banakok Times.

If You Want The Best

ALTHOUGH you may have had good luck with but few failures in making cake and biscuit in the old-fashioned way with soda and sour milk, or soda and cream of tartar, you will have better luck and (following directions) no failures with the Royal Baking Powder.

The truth of this must be evident when you remember that in the leading hotels and restaurants, and in the homes of our city cousins, where the latest and best methods are invariably employed, and where the most beautiful and dainty food is always set out for the guests, the Royal Baking Powder is exclusively used for all quickly risen food.

Royal Baking Powder never disappoints; never makes sour, soggy or husky food; never spoils good materials; never leaves lumps of alkali in the biscuit or cake; while all these things do happen with the best of cooks who cling to the old-fashioned methods, or who use other Baking Powders.

If you want the best food, Royal Baking Powder is indispensable.

IN OLDEN TIMES.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

Milk Pans,

and pails, and cans, and bottles (even baby's)—or anything that you want particularly clean, ought to be washed with Pearline.

You'll save work in doing it, and it's a great deal more thoroughly done. Dairies and dealers use Pearline extensively. Just try it once, on your milk-ware or butter-ware—and then say if it isn't the most satisfactory way of cleaning. Pearline is the most economical thing you can use, too. You get so much more out of it.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION. The Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists. 25 CTS.

We offer you a ready made medicine for Coughs, Bronchitis, and other diseases of the Throat and Lungs. Like other so called Patent Medicines, it is well advertised, and having merit it has attained a wide sale under the name of Piso's Cure for Consumption.

It is now a "Nostrum," though at first it was compounded after a prescription by a regular physician, with no idea that it would ever go on the market as a proprietary medicine. But after compounding that prescription over a thousand times in one year, we named it "Piso's Cure for Consumption," and began advertising it in a small way. A medicine known all over the world is the result.

Why is it not just as good as though costing fifty cents to a dollar for a prescription and an equal sum to have it put up at a drug store?

DELANO DIARY

—If you want brick go to John Coolen's.

—Fresh Oysters at C. H. Green & Co's Grocery.

—E. J. Swedeback is at work on I. C. Stewart's new residence, on Third street.

—John Plattner, of S. W. Franklin, came into town on Tuesday just as if the roads were dry.

—Several Delanoites expect to attend the World's Fair at Chicago during the summer.

—E. J. Swedeback is having a new portico built on the front of his Second street property, the old Van Eman house, which adds much to its appearance.

—A Rebecca Lodge was instituted here on Tuesday evening, with a membership of 42 members. Seems as if there was a Rebecca for about every I. O. O. F.

—The road bosses can now see in traveling over their beats where drains, fills and so on are needed. Jot them down bosses, and when it is dry enough attend to them.

—A great many animated discussions were held on our streets, this week, concerning the post office appointment at this place. Aspirants are Valentine Eppel and M. A. O'Hair.

—Little Rosa Murphy's funeral was held on Tuesday, from the M. E. church. Her sisters, Mrs. Farmer and Mrs. Yives and their families from Minneapolis, were here to attend.

—Paul Plotnik is straightening up things on his recent purchase, lots on the river bank opposite the City Grocery, where he expects some day to have the finest blacksmith shop in town.

—Some of our most enterprising citizens are at work in their gardens, and some have planted seeds. The time of year for such work in this country is early as possible in the Spring.

—Yesterday was a dark drizzly day, with a cold raw wind. Sleet fell sufficiently to cover the ground with a coat of white. Several sharp reports of thunder were heard and lightnings flashed; on the whole, it was a typical April day with its showers. Though somewhat cold.

—Our village ordinances makes it the duty of the Village Marshall to see that the village ordinances are enforced. He is also the executive officer of the Board of Health and it is his duty to see that all nuisances are abated; also to see that the pig ordinance is enforced. Look out for him and have things in order.

—Quite a little talk has been indulged in this week among a few of our citizens concerning the prosecution of violations of the liquor licenses. Also of looking after the officers that they discharge their duties, according to law. If both parties to the liquor contracts will endeavor to the best of their ability to live up to their bargain possibly some expense may be saved some one.

—Our neighbor up street now has almost as many heads as Hydra. Her correspondents are becoming a mutual admiration society of their own and are playing at the game of you tickle me and I'll tickle you. This is far more agreeable to the average reader than the heavy, and profound editorials that come weekly from the sarcastic pen of the chief and which are not always directed at the most deserving.

—A bridge across Crow River, at Wright's ford, could be used to advantage at the present writing. When the water is so high there is no way to cross but by boat, and that is not a safe method as was sufficiently demonstrated a few years ago when three young people met death in trying to cross, a short distance above that place. Let a bridge be built as soon as possible. We understand that by laying out a road a short distance into Woodland making it run through a part of two townships the county would help build the bridge. This method might be looked up and if a road is needed, then made use of to secure the desired aid.

—After news came of the recommendations of several men to hold post offices that had held them before the patrons of our office were very much surprised on Monday to learn that Valentine Eppel, who held the office in so satisfactory a manner under Cleveland's first administration and received for his appointment again, the endorsement of nearly every business man in town including the new aspirant for this office, together with that of the member of the county committee from our district, the chairman of the county committee, the congressional committee man from our county, and others, was to be brought under the ruling where if a man held office before he should not be allowed to hold it again.

—Advertise in the GAZETTE.

—If you need lime, call on John Coolen. 27.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—J. A. Brasie is having his house reshingled.

—Tomorrow, April 8 will be the regular fair day in Delano.

—L. Bartlett has moved into the Baldus residence in South Delano.

—Rev. Soares, of Minneapolis, is to hold services on the Sabbath, at 10:30 A. M.

—A. F. Corey closed his term of school in the Walker District on Saturday, last.

—It looks now as if Delano would have as many houses built as any of her neighbors this summer.

—Arrangements have been made to organize an order of Knights of Pythias here, on Thursday, the 13th inst.

—If the Eagle keeps on it will surely succeed in sending us to Congress, if it can't get the Post Office for us.

—Duck hunters are on the quiviye as the numerous fat ducks are wafted northward on the Spring breezes.

—The west bound morning train yesterday was delayed for some time at this place on account of a couple of hot boxes.

—Paul Janikula has rented his farm to Frank Fautsch and with his family, expects to make Minneapolis his home for awhile.

—E. S. Farnham is assisting J. W. Parsons in the grist mill. Judging from the amount of flour he gets on his clothes he is a first rate miller.

—The gentle zephyrs, of Hancock, now toy with the whiskers of our esteemed fellow townsman Sam Pape. He having got through at Breckenridge.

—The Eagle is terribly tortured to think that M. A. O'Hair might be postmaster. One of M. A's principal and most effective arguments is that fact.

—"We have no desire to be anything but an American citizen worthy of the name."—Local in the Eagle. Wouldn't you be postmaster, not if you could get it?

—A wild duck attracted the attention of a crowd this morning by swimming leisurely along the west bank of the Crow, while people were getting their mail a few rods away.

—The road to Watertown is impassible on account of a washout near Henn's place. Travel takes the old road turning off this side of Chancellor's and going up near Felt's place.

—The Public School is in receipt of quite a handsome lot of books for their new library and still nearly a hundred volumes more are to come. Thanks to the efforts of Principal Dewey.

—Casper Enwiller sold, on Monday, his farm within the village limits, and containing 56 acres, for $2150. Casper Janikula and John Lanquish were the purchasers. Mr. Enwiller will move with his family to the west soon.

—Superintendent John Mayer and family have returned to Delano where we understand the family will occupy their residence on Watertown street. Fred Brandes moving into the Brothers house still further South on the same street.

—John Cunningham sold, on Monday, 40 acres of his farm on the Watertown road to Peter Wasolock, price, $1800. Mr. W. will build a residence and move in soon. Mr. C. thinks some of building on his lots in the village on South Third street.

—School begins Monday morning, next. Let every pupil be in his or her place promptly at 9 A. M. determined to wage harder war than ever upon the hard lessons and knotty problems; and may success attend the earnest efforts of each is the wish of the GAZETTE.

—Our esteemed townsman, pump repairer Timothy Gleeson, Esq., to whose generosity our friend the town pump owes much of its ability to supply the traveling community with their drinks, has arrived home from his imprisonment by the rushing waters of South Dakota, where he spent 5 or 6 days last week and this. He looks hale and hearty.

—The river is within a couple of feet of high water mark, and in many places has overflown its banks, carrying away bridges and inundating roads. On the Watertown road people must drive through a couple of feet of water west of the bridge in the village. At Jacob Henn's place the culvert is out and gone and travel has to go over the old roads. On this side the river near the cemetery the road is nearly impassible.

—On Sunday night some one was prowling around on the roof of Al. Eppel's residence and from the fact that an upper window was found raised it is supposed they were in an upper room but the doors being locked could not get down stairs. Mrs. E. and Miss Haffner who was spending the night with her, were considerably frightened. We understand the next fellow that shows up around there will be in danger, at least, of receiving a dose of lead, as the occupants of the house propose to be supplied with fire arms.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—The Eagle is about to have a spell because Mike O'Hair wants the post office.

—Mr. Christ Gast visited Kirkhoyen in the interests of the G. N. Ry, Tuesday in the absence of Mr. Timothy Gleeson, Esq.

—The Easter services held at the M. E. church on Sabbath evening were well attended. The Sabbath school furnished an entertaining programme and Rev. Davies gave a short talk.

—Trains were delayed here Sunday evening on account of the shaking up the railroad bridge received from the ice going out on Sunday. After inspection and trial, on Monday morning trains were allowed to pass, it being found that no serious damage had been done the bridge.

—Mrs. Catherine O'Leary was awarded $200. damages in a suit against the city of Minneapolis for injuries received on account of defective sidewalks. It is a wonder Delano don't have a suit of this kind as several sidewalks are out of fix, one on River street has been under water for quite awhile.

—Messrs. Drew, of Minneapolis, were in town last week they claim to have made in their shop, recently one of the largest summer sausages ever made and smoked. It is one link weighing 34 lbs, and is 11 feet 4 inches long, and 3 inches in diameter. It is to be sent to the World's Fair for exhibition. Their shop also sends a fine pair of horns for people to look at.

—Landlord Jacobs smole his blandest smile when he secured two lady passengers from the cities on Saturday evening. After lugging two heavy grips to the hotel and with his polite "right this way ladies" had got them nicely seated in his commodious parlor one went into "Hysterics," and at the suggestion of a visitor, Will got a doctor and then learned that his wife and a young lady friend had perpetrated an April Fool, and then

Will smole not his blandest smile,
No, no, not for a long while.

County Cullings.

We understand that the probabilities are that Mr. Zachman will retain the St. Michaels post office.

I. H. Harvey, one of Rockford's staunchest Democrats, returned this week from a visit to friends in the East.

The legislature is still working away. The bill to change the name of Moonshine to Gladstone was found to be unconstitutional.

Senator Eaton's bill to have biennual sessions of sixty days each, ran against the "Sage brush" in the Senate and was cyphered out to be annually.

The Re-apportionment bill seems to have a hard time in the legislature. Some think there are too many legislators now; others think it would be better to have more. Still others favor leaving the numbers about the same as we have.

Waverly boasts of a building boom. Cokato is killing off her blind pigs. Monticello is bridging the Father of Waters. Buffalo is figuring on a match factory. Delano capitalists are talking of a paper mill. Hoora for Wright county anyway!

Congressman Baldwin has recommended for postmasters in Wright county M. O'Loughlin, Maple Lake; J. C. Nugent, Buffalo; Charles Cullen, Waverly; David Jackson, Howard Lake. These will, doubtless, soon receive their appointments.

The Howard Lake Herald comes to us this week in a changed form. It is now a six column quarto, with a Cokato department, headed the Cokato Herald, Vol. I, No. 1, with A. J. Whitaker, local editor. Nothing like enterprise, and Mr. Saylor seems to have it.

The Wright County Times don't seem to appreciate the mention of A. Y. Eaton as a possible candidate for Congress in two years from now. And claims not to have heard of it before reading it in the GAZETTE. That's what the GAZETTE is for, Mr. Times, to learn people the news. A. Y. set his mark, years ago, and he is not one to look back, after taking hold of the handles.

Sherburne county Republicans are heartily tired of being domineered over by Wright county Republicans and desire to be set off from this Senatorial district. With the existing state of affairs it looks as if it would be better for both Wright and Sherburne that their respective interests could better be looked after by men acquainted and in harmony with the interests of each than to have a dictator from outside their county limits who tries to straddle over both counties and like an old hen trying to cover too many eggs make a failure of it. Let Wright have her own Senator. She has a population sufficient to warrant one.

Monticello people are suffering the consequence of a few men's mistakes or willful blunders in securing money with which to build their bridge. They seem to have gone at it wrong, and to have been blundering ever since, as the fact that they could not satisfy the County Attorney with their methods last year and the later decission of Treasurer McKnight not to pay an order of $6000. because no proper claim was presented to the County Commissioners before the warrant was issued, and the still later holding of Judge Hicks with the Treasurer. Judge Hicks is reported as thinking the taxpayers have a right to know they are paying their money for something. The committee in charge of the construction could save lots of time, money, and ill feeling by living up to the letter of the law. Monticello should have a bridge honestly in the sight of all men.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

Do Not Worry.

It has been said that worry kills more people than work. The evil is not easily overcome. The suggestion in the following lines may be helpful to some:

Do you wish a receipt for preventing all worry?
For giving composure and freedom from flurry?
Just think of one fact whose truth you will find
When anything happens to flurry your mind.
First something or nothing there is to be done,
First nothing or something, thats clear as the sun;
If something, then do it and make no delay;
If nothing, all thought of it cast far away.
This simplest of rules if you will obey,
Will free you from wrinkles for many a day.
—Methodist Herald.

WINDS and cyclones have torn up things generally in Kansas and Nebaska, Iowa, Indiana and other places. A large list of killed was made.

THE wheat business seems to have proven too big a thing for Pardridge, C. A. Pillsbury is said to have settled for some of his poor guesses, also.

AT present it looks as if Congressman Fletcher on his arrival in Washington will find himself in about the kind of a "fix" he was once upon a time in Canada.

SUPPOSE the pine land grabbers do make it appear that they have been carrying on their dishonest practices for a quarter of a century or so, is that any reason they should not be made to stop them now?

CONGRESSMAN BALDWIN has been working up an investigation of the pine land steal and now Secretary Hoke Smith has announced his intention of taking hold of the matter in a few days and sifting it to the bottom.

THE members of the Senate investigating committee have quite evidently stirred up some of the pine log and lumber dealers of the Saw dust city, including your uncle Loren, who seeks to belittle the committee and their findings but he seems to have "bit off more than he can chew."

THE following have been named by Gov. Nelson as the new Capitol commission:

H. W. Lamberton of Winona, First district; James W. McHench of Martin county, Second district; George A. Du Toit of Chaska, Third district; Chambing Seabury of St. Paul, Fourth district; John De Laittre of Minneapolis, Fifth district; Col. C. H. Graves of Duluth, Sixth district; and T. H. Barrett of Herman, Seventh district.

THE Daily Globe of Tuesday publishes several columns, double width, of the report of the Senate investigating committee. It goes on to say that the State has been robbed for years, of millions of money, by frauds concerning the estimating of the amount of timber on pine and hard wood lands, on school sections; on University lands; on Swamp lands; Government lands, through tax frauds and in almost every conceivable way. Land containing valuable timber sold for a mere fraction of its real value, school funds to suffer by it. Nothing but the cullings left; the finest of everything being gobbled up by greedy seekers after wealth; their love of money leading them to do things not in accord with the law, nor with a clear conscience. No wonder people have insomnia, can't sleep nights, when the "root of all evil" has such sway over them. The remedy proposed is to have a committee appointed to look this thing up and report either to the Governor or to an extra session of the Legislature to be called next January, for the purpose. Some rich developments are promised by those having the matter in hand, and who have already found enough to incite them to still greater efforts to ferret out the whole matter. The school and other lands should be made available for the purposes for which they have been set aside. Great corporations and wealthy logging firms should pay their taxes at the same ratio, at least, as the poor people who are actual residents of the reigions desecrated and made desolate by their insatiate desire to obtain wealth, no matter how. Let the good work go on. Let reparation be made as far as can be. And further wrongs of this kind be stopped forthwith.
